Selling Yourself = A War Time Duty

IT is right that the motion picture industry should be classed as an essential industry. But it is not right, simply because it has been so classed, that it should continue to permit inefficiency, extravagance and waste to run amuck within its doors.

The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation was created primarily to save the exhibitor money. It makes possible, however, even a greater saving to the Government.

When you sell yourself, as you do under the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated, you not only save for yourself the high cost of film selling, but you save the Government man power, and the use of capital for other purposes.

If all motion pictures were booked on this plan, hundreds of film salesmen, shippers and other film employees would be released to other useful industries, and millions of dollars would be saved the exhibitor, the public and the exchanges to help the Government win the war.

The Affiliated will be ready within the next thirty days to begin saving money and man power.

Have you arranged to get your share of this saving? If not, get in touch with the National Director of the Affiliated in your territory at once, or send for the booklet, "The Exhibitor Dominant."

WILLIAM FOX NEW POLICY

SERVICE and profit to the exhibitor will be the William Fox slogan during the season of 1918-1919. The greatest selection and the best productions in the history of the William Fox organization are assured.

FOUR BIG TIMELY PICTURES
These productions are of such tremendous importance—bear so strongly on the events of the hour—that merely to mention them is to prove their power to produce profits for exhibitors.

1. WHY AMERICA WILL WIN! Based on the life of General Pershing—an intimate, romantic, carefully prepared, authentic story reaching back to the American general's brieffoot days and showing him on the farm, as schoolmaster, in West Point, in Japan, and as a fighter in the Philippines, Mexico and France. Staged by Richard Stanton in seven reels.

2. QUEEN OF THE SEA, with Annette Kellerman. A six reel, sub-sea phantasm, featuring Miss Kellerman in daring aquatic stunts amid settings of surpassing beauty. A sure-fire box office winner. To be released on a rental basis.

3. The PRUSSIAN CUR. Captain Horst von der Goltz, for ten years a secret agent of the Kaiser, is one of the principal characters and makes amazing disclosures of the conspiracies of Ambassador Count von Bernstorff and of the dastardly plots for the destruction of American factories, for subsidizing newspapers, for interfering with the draft and for crippling ships, wrecking trains and throttling governmental war activities. Staged by R. A. Walsh and enacted by a large and remarkable cast, including Miriam Cooper.

4. WHY I DID NOT MARRY. A morality picture that is both striking and timely and produced along unique lines, giving it a powerful box office appeal. It is the life story of the world's most beautiful woman—a pet in the lap of luxury. Her reasons for refusing to marry make a most graphic and absorbing story with stupendous profit possibilities. In a short time William Fox also will announce the release date of the Theodore Roosevelt film, "Put the Flag on the Firing Line."

STANDARD PICTURES
Twenty-six Standard Pictures are to be released during the coming season. These will be the greatest productions in this classic series. There will be eight releases each by Theda Bara and William Farnum and ten all-star productions.

Twenty-six Victory Pictures will be released. This group includes Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell, George Walsh and other foremost stars of the screen.

EXCEL PICTURES
Twenty-six Excel Pictures will include releases by Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland, Jewel Carmen, Jane and Katherine Lee and others.

SUNSHINE COMEDIES
Henry Lehrman, the master director of this type of production, will produce twenty-six Sunshine Comedies.

MUTT AND JEFF ANIMATED CARTOONS

Hattrick and Hubbell Return from Front

Representatives of Committee on Public Information Carry Camera from Alsace to the Sea—Stage in Paris Big Showing of “America’s Answer to the Hun”—Former International Official Talks of Experiences

The gratitude that war-stricken France feels toward the United States for her participation in the great world war was made evident when the first American war film, showing the activities of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, was presented at the Gaumont Palace on June 29. The French newspapers devoted columns of space to the exhibition, and one enthusiastic writer closed his story by stating that the show was converted into a love-feast for the French and American people.

“America’s Answer to the Hun,” the title of the film, was produced and presented by E. B. Hattrick and C. J. Hubbell, who were sent abroad last March by the Committee on Public Information for the purpose of gathering film with the American Expeditionary Forces and issuing the product in Europe. They have just returned to this country after an exciting trip that took them with all the active divisions in the line and also gave them an opportunity of seeing and photographing some of the enormous work being undertaken by the United States Government back of the lines.

“Few people,” said Mr. Hattrick, in speaking of his experiences, “can appreciate what France has suffered in this war. For four years she has been bleeding. Her men have died by the thousands; her villages have been destroyed. America is in it; England is in it and has been from the start; but the war has been fought on the soil of France, and their suffering is far greater than that of any other nation with the exception of Belgium. While the morale of the French people is wonderful, it is only natural that after four years of this bloody struggle they become tired.

“Last spring, during the great drive against the British in the north, there were many anxious days. Then the Hun began shelling Paris with his big gun, and while this did very little material damage it reminded the Parisians that he was knocking at the gates of Paris. America had been in the war a year, and while our Government had been carrying on a great deal of work to care for the immense army she was transporting to France few people outside the Government officials knew of it. Then came the drive on Paris the latter part of May, when the Boches broke through the line between Soissons and Rheims. But he came too late.

When France Knew America Was in the War.

Uncle Sam had been pouring a large number of troops into France, and two divisions were thrown into the gap at Chateau-Thierry. Here the advancing Hun was stopped the first week in June. The effect was marvelous. For the first time all France realized that we were actually in the war; that our men were up there bleeding and dying like their own soldiers. We had been holding portions of the line for nearly a year and had done some good work, but this was different. Our troops had actually gone in and stopped the drive on Paris.

“Two weeks later the committee had the first showing of ‘America’s Answer to the Hun’ in Paris. The great amphitheatre, which had been kindly donated by M. Leon Gaumont, was packed from the pit to the roof. Marshal Joffre, Ambassador Sharp, Lord Derby, the British Ambassador; James Kerney, head of the Committee on Public Information in Paris, and many other notables filled the boxes. Sections were reserved for the American Red Cross, V. M. C. A., the press and other organizations connected with the army, and one section was occupied by wounded marines who had been in the Chateau Thierry fight.

An American military band, surrounded by a bower of flowers and palms, occupied the center of the stage and gave popular American and French airs while the house was being filled. A French orchestra supplied the music during the projection of the film. Between the first and second parts a touching incident took place when, after the

American band had finished playing, the French musicians stood up and showered them with roses.

Film Carried Men from Ship to Trenches.

“The film itself was made from a dupe negative, the original having been shipped to the War Department in Washington. It carried our troops from their arrival at the seaports in France up to the front-line trenches, and also showed the enormous construction work behind the lines. The last reel was made up almost entirely of the Chateau Thierry material, all of which was made by Mr. Hubbell, including the picture of the shelling Chateau Thierry. Near the end of the reel was a picture of President Wilson, with an excerpt from one of his famous messages. There had been wonderful applause all during the showing of the film, but when the President’s picture appeared the French people got up and cheered. It certainly made one feel proud to be an American.”

“Arrangements were made with the Pathé and Gaumont companies for distribution throughout France of this picture. Copies were also sent to Switzerland and to the committee’s representative at Rome. I also took a copy to London, where it had its first public showing on July 27, and arrangements were made to distribute it throughout the British Isles by the British Ministry of Information.”

Mr. Hatrick and Mr. Hubbell visited every division in the line while in France, but his most exciting experience occurred at Chateau Thierry, where he was sent by general headquarters. His party arrived there some time before our troops, and the pictures secured at this place show the roads filled with refugees on their way south, the French and British wounded, the arrival of American troops, including the marines, the shelling of Chateau Thierry, etc.

The work of gathering motion picture film and still photographs with the American Expeditionary Forces all comes under the jurisdiction of the Signal Corps, and in speaking of this work Dr. Hatrick said: “There are a number of good operators in France now attached to the Signal Corps, some of them privates, some sergeants and some commissioned officers. In some cases the commissioned officers are not as good as the privates, but we must remember that we were expanding an army from 180,000 to over 2,000,000 in a little more than a year, and these conditions are likely to creep in. One of the great faults with a number of the cameramen was due to the fact that they were all too eager for quick promotion without doing the necessary work to earn it.”

Carry Your Camera as the Doughboy Does His Rifle.

“At the outbreak of the war commissions were given to a number of cameramen, some of whom were in the draft age. Later on the War Department ruled that commissions would not be given to men of the draft age until after they had enlisted and were found worthy of a commission. As a result a number of men enlisted, and when they did get commissions the first week they felt sore. We must all remember that the first function of an army is to fight. Everything else is secondary. There are a great many boys in the infantry carrying rifles and fighting in the trenches that occupied as high a station in life as cameramen and earned just as much money. Cameramen are needed in this war. The Government needs film and needs photographs. I have this message to convey to all cameramen: If you are drafted and on account of your special ability are transferred to the photographic division of the army, or if you enlist voluntarily as a private in the photographic division, carry your camera like the doughboy does his rifle: You may find now and then an officer in your line of work that doesn’t know as much as you do about it, but that isn’t going to harm you. Compare yourself, not to the incompetent officer, but to the competent private and do with your camera what he is doing with his rifle.”

Mr. Hatrick was formerly secretary of the International Film Service and had charge of the Hearst-Pathe News reel, and Mr. Hubbell was a cameraman employed on the staff of the Hearst-Pathe News.

Alice Brady to Return to the Stage

Taking Stellar Role of “Forever After,” However, Will Not Interfere with Select Contract.

Alice Brady has ever been an energetic young woman. This is a fact long since proved, but by way of additional evidence in support thereof is the recent announcement that Miss Brady will return to the speaking stage in the stellar role of “Forever After,” a new play by Owen Davis, which William A. Brady will present for the first time at Long Branch on August 12.

Miss Brady, it develops, discovered that the business of being one of the screen’s most successful stars did not take quite all of her time—there were on occasion a few hours in the evening when she wasn’t occupied. This would never do. Also having been away from the stage for some three years, she entertained a desire to hear her own voice. At this juncture Mr. Brady came along with the suggestion to his daughter that “Forever After” was a play after her own heart. Miss Brady read, agreed, and action was immediate.

Miss Brady’s return to the stage is made possible through permission from the Select Pictures Corporation, to which she is under contract—and will in no way affect her work before the camera.
Show That You Are a True American

Earn a Diploma from the Government by Exhibiting "Pershing's Crusaders" and Help Your Exchange Earn the Beautiful Bronze Trophy Offered by This Publication to the Most Alert Booking Office—Incidentally You'll Make Money

EXHIBITORS know that a good lobby display is half the fight in getting them in. Here's a chance to get a lobby display that will be important, permanent and attractive, and at the same time you can clean up more money than you can on the biggest dramatic feature. Book "Pershing's Crusaders" and you will be sent one of the most beautiful diplomas reproduced here. It will stamp your theatre as an all-American house and the diploma carries with it the seal of Government as well as a public appeal.

The Division of Films of the United States Government Committee on Public Information has decided to award this diploma to every exhibitor who aids his country by presenting to its people the message of the Republic. This is beautifully printed upon a vellum sheet 19 by 26 inches, a gold seal and the tri-color ribbon. The cut, of course, does not do full justice to the elaborate original, but it gives some idea of the perfection of the printer's art. It will give to every exhibitor the thanks of his Government for his aid in the dissemination of information, and will be a certificate of public service that stands for something real in those stirring times.

The certificate will be sent direct from New York to each exhibitor who books this first Government release as soon as possible after the Division of Films has been advised of the booking. It should be framed as richly as possible and given a prominent place in the lobby display before being taken inside to find a more permanent place in the foyer. It will be noticed that there are spaces for six subjects, the first of which will be lettered in. The others can be filled in time to time as the follow subjects are booked.

This brings us an important point in this context. Exchange booking releases by the United States Government are not merely random collections of strips of film, nor are they issued as a moneymaking scheme. These subjects are the cream of the thousands of feet of negative made each day by the Government staff photographers, which will eventually find a place in the archives of the country as a permanent pictorial history of the war. Perhaps you recall the photographs of the Civil War, dug up after many years in the studio of a Washington photographer. Perhaps you remember what odd-looking things these old wet-process plates seemed to you. Crude as they were, they form a priceless record, and they are not comparable to the records made on film in the present war.

From the very best of these negatives the Government selects pictures that will show in the most orderly progression just what is being done in the great fight for World-liberty. "Pershing's Crusaders" is the first of these, and it is the desire of the President and his advisers that every theatre in these United States shall be given opportunity to know precisely what is being done by our land and naval forces to meet this great emergency. Never in the history of the world has such a gigantic task been undertaken, and it is the wish of the heads of Government that everyone be kept informed. Newspapers cannot convey an adequate idea. The pictorial diploma alone can give a real conception of the magnitude of the task and of the success with which this work is being carried out. The successive pictures will show just what is accomplished, and it will be an up-to-the-second pictorial history that even a child can grasp.

For this reason the Government desires not alone that "Pershing's Crusaders" shall be given the utmost publicity, but it wants all of the pictures in turn to be given an equally wide showing. It feels that the first picture will, of itself, create a demand for the others, and for that reason is pushing it as strongly as possible. And it is for that reason that the Moving Picture World has sought to do its bit by giving an added incentive to the exchange managers who are primarily responsible for its introduction. Now comes this Government offer of a proof of patriotism to every exhibitor who lends its aid.

This is a wonderful opportunity for the motion picture business to gain public notice. There is need that it shall be recognized as something more than an amusement device. In the Liberty Loan drive, in the Red Cross campaign and in many other ways the pictures have shown what a tremendous factor film publicity can be made. It calls for no sacrifice on the part of the managers, for the reports from all over the country are showing that the film is a clean-up. The only possible sacrifice is the laying over of a picture already booked on a program, and if you handle these reels expertly you do not even make this sacrifice, for you can make an excess profit that will more than cover this loss.

Get busy now. Get into touch with the nearest First National Exchange Committee Manager in handling the reels. Book it for an early showing and then tear things loose. Start in to boom the picture right away and keep on talking until after it is shown.

There is no room this week to quote from the letter received, but we want to tell what C. Post Mason, of the Denver exchange wrote. He says: "Every showman who has so far played 'Pershing's Crusaders' in this territory has shown a profit on his investment in dollars and cents in addition to assisting the Government to place before the public facts and feats of unequalled magnitude, which stand as records throughout the universe."

That is what exchange men and exhibitors alike report. They are making money and at the same time fighting German propaganda with the most deadly weapon yet disclosed—picture publicity. If you have not yet planned to do your bit, do it today.

HENDERSON RETURNS TO PETROVA.

Daniel Henderson, who left the McClure-Petrova organization some time ago to engage in an advertising agency work, announces that he has returned to the McClure organization and will resume charge of the advertising of McClure and Petrova pictures in addition to other work on McClure's Magazine.
National Association on Edge for New Year

Many Committee Meetings Held During the Past Week and All Largely Attended—Large Plans for Government Co-operation

During the week which has just closed, there have been more meetings at the offices of the National Association than at any position in the Times Building, than during any similar period since the organization was formed two years ago.

The best evidence of the healthy condition of the organization is the fact that the meetings have been very largely attended and in several instances every committee member was present. The new administration headed by President William A. Brady had not left Boston, where the annual meeting was held on July 19, before plans were put into effect for the calling of these meetings and as a result several steps have been taken which will be of direct benefit to the industry, but beyond this, the outstanding feature of the last week has been the spirit in which is being displayed in plans for cooperating with the Government and the other agencies which are co-ordinating with it in the prosecution of the war.

On Monday President Brady called together the heads of the export departments of the producing and distributing as well as the exporting companies to meet Carl Byor, associate chairman of the Committee on Public Information. On Tuesday a similar meeting was arranged with the executive officials of the producing and distributing companies of the National Association.

On Monday afternoon, President Brady, accompanied by Marcus Loew and F. H. Elliott, executive secretary, attended the organization meeting of the committee which has been formed to secure funds for the erection of a suitable memorial to President Theodore Roosevelt, as an annex to the United States Museum, New York City, and who was the friend of the motion picture men.

On Wednesday occurred the first luncheon of Division 5 of the National Association which was the biggest affair of its kind ever held by the organization. This in itself indicates the renewed interest in the work of the National Association.

On Thursday noon, the members of the Fuel Conservation Committee recently appointed by President Brady met for the purpose of organizing. Marcus Loew was elected chairman and Harold Edel secretary. The other members of the committee include Du Ponts, R. S. Moss, J. H. Hallberg, P. A. Powers, who was represented by Paul Gulick, and President Brady, who was represented by Executive Secretary Elliott.

Hallberg Named as Technical Adviser

This committee was created by an advisory board with representatives in each important city. J. H. Hallberg was designated as technical adviser to the committee. President Brady has telegraphed Harry A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator at Washington, of the organization of the committee and that it is anxious to co-operate with the Fuel Administration and desires a conference with him at an early date.

A meeting of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Exposition Company was held on Thursday afternoon, at which time routine matters were considered and arrangements made to call together all of the companies which have contracted for space at the exposition scheduled to be held at the Grand Central Palace October 5-13.

The committee which was designated earlier in the week to co-operate with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information met with Associate-Chairman Carl Byor at the National Association’s offices on Friday morning. The meeting of the week was the one held on Friday afternoon to meet Joseph Johnson, director of Publicity of the American Red Cross, the story of which is told in another column.

Enters Third Year Under the Most Favorable Conditions

It is evident the National Association has entered its third year under the most favorable conditions. The new administration is six weeks ahead of last year in the work already done. It was not until August 27 a year ago that the adjourned meeting of the members was held in New York when the nominations of the directors were confirmed and officers elected.

With the support which has been promised by individuals and the executives of the companies which are not members of the National Association it is contended that the next year will see a much better feeling and bringing in to the organization the active support and co-operation of several concerns which have announced their intention of affiliating without delay.

Throughout all of the work of the organization, attention is being first given to plans for co-operation with the Government and other agencies which are depending so much now upon the film and screen to assist in supplying their propaganda before the American public. Within a fortnight it is expected President Brady will announce the new committees which are to co-operate with the Government authorities.

Six Detroit Theatres Show First Runs

Three Will Be Operated by Kunsky, Who Refuses Half Million Offer for Lease of One of Them.

The big interest in Detroit will be the first-run situation for the coming season. With six big theatres showing first-run features an entire week it remains to be seen what the effect will be on pictures available and the kind of business each will do. It will certainly be an eye-opener to the industry if Detroit is able to support all of them, giving a good profit to each house.

The firm exhibits which have planned their bookings for the coming season is John H. Kunsky, of the Kunsky Enterprises, controlling chain of ten houses, three of which will be first-run. Mr. Kunsky, and his general manager, George W. Trendle, have been carefully going over the situation, and in the belief that there will be a few state right features made that will be worthy of first-run in their theatres they have anticipated by signing up what they contend to be the very best attractions.

In connection with Mr. Kunsky’s plans for the coming season it might also be mentioned incidentally that he turned down an offer to sub-lease his Adams Theatre, which would have netted him a profit of $20,000 per annum for the life of his lease; in other words, Mr. Kunsky turned down a positive net profit of close to a half million dollars on the Adams believing he will make double the profit by operating the theatre himself with first-run motion pictures.

“With the best managers we ever had—with the pick of the stars and the pick of the best pictures—the coming season looks exceptionally fine, and I do not believe Kunsky, Detroit is exceedingly prosperous; it has war orders running into billions of dollars; people will want to see good pictures and we intend to present them with elaboration that will be worthy of more than a hundred per cent better, and we can see nothing in the world that should prevent all the houses doing good business,” At least, we never opened a season with greater optimism.”

Eastman to Take Up Dyestuff Making

Big Rochester Concern Devoting All Resources of Its Laboratories to the New American Industry.

A MOST important announcement was made the other day when the Eastman Kodak Company stated it was going in for the manufacture of dyestuffs and was devoting all the resources of its research laboratories to the new field.

The laboratories of the Kodak company are located at its Kodak Park plant in Rochester. At the same time the company has for a long time been turning out upward of four hundred miles of film, or over two million feet, a day.

The entrance of the company into the making of dye-stuffs will be the result of growing up to be the realization of the Kodak concern who will no longer enjoy a practical monopoly of the film business and will use part of its plant in the new industry. There have been many stories of late of the actual anticipations in the making of film films by members of Delaware, and also by P. A. Powers, who has taken over the plant of the old Fireproof Film Company, in Rochester, and who is said to have secured control of certain patents for making film earlier that was announced that the base for the making of film has been furnished the Kodak company by the Du Ponts, and that they are now preparing to use all of this themselves.
Weeklies to Issue Red Cross Pictures

Joseph Johnson, Director of Publicity, Gets Advice from Film Men Regarding Method of Distribution.

At the invitation of Joseph Johnson, director of publicity for the Red Cross, a number of motion picture men met Mr. Johnson at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, New York, on Friday afternoon to discuss methods of distribution for pictures secured by the Red Cross. That organization has a large footage of pictures taken by caméramen at the war fronts of France, Belgium and Italy, but through lack of organization has not been able to get them before the public. Recently Mr. Johnson secured the services of W. E. Waddell, for several years with Edison and other companies, as sales manager and distributor of Red Cross pictures, both of whom were present at the conference Friday.

Mr. Johnson explained that his desire was to arrive at the best method of presenting pictures—a method that would place them before the public regardless of the profit that might accrue, wide distribution being preferred to returns. He said that the Red Cross had a vivid story to tell to the millions of troops held under inspection of its activities and that he believed they would be anxious to learn what had been done with their money.

Considerable discussion followed on the direction of William A. Brady, who occupied the chair. It was finally decided to appoint a committee to act in an advisory capacity with Mr. Johnson, and these were named: William F. Waddell, national Red Cross影片影片; Fell Mitchell, editor of Gaumont Weekly; Arthur Friend of the Famous Players-Lasky Company; William Brandt, Brooklyn exhibitor; J. E. Brutalot, Eastman Kodak Company; and J. L. Hoff of the Moving Picture World.

In the meeting of the committee that was held immediately following its appointment Mr. Johnson was advised to distribute his pictures through the various picture weeklies and to make the best bargain he could to place the largest possible amount of film, the opinion being unanimous that he would get the widest distribution in that manner.

Contributions to Mitchell Memorial.

During the progress of the meeting Mr. Brady and Mr. Fox took occasion to bring up a movement started among motion picture men to raise a fund for the Mitchell Memorial. The following contributions were made: William Fox, $250; Gabriel Hess, for Goldwyn, $250; J. E. Brutalot, $100; F. J. Tichenor, $100; W. A. Brady, $100; William Brandt, $10; Associate Motion Picture Advertisers, $200; C. J. O'Reilly, $10. It was understood that this was but the nucleus of a much larger fund that is to be raised by the motion picture men as their contribution to the Mitchell Memorial.

“The Fourth of July Parade in Paris”

Inspiring View of Our Boys Marching and Red Cross Nurses in Parade Through the Beautiful Tree-Lined Streets of Paris.

A MID a frenzy of excitement, parades and exhibitions every more than demonstrative, our soldiers are seen to unusual advantage in this official Red Cross picture of the Fourth of July parade in Paris. Never has such a perfect formation been seen on Fifth Avenue as that our troops held under inspection of the French people, trained to arms by boyhood. Pictorial skill in great cities sometimes fails to be impressed, but the heart of the unknown, the undisclosed, tree foliage, such as beautifies many of the avenues of Paris, the Champs-Elysees, broad, garden-bordered and extending from the beautiful Place de la Concorde over a mile to the Place de l'Etoile.

In this lovely environment our splendid troops are invested with a glamour fascinating for us all at this moment, a presentation worth preserving for the eyes of future ages. Had they marched in the Crassaw, France, and this pictorial representation is not merely to show us how well they appear in foreign lands, but it has significance as a measure of historical importance.

At the conclusion of this parade the men realize at present. They should be shown in all parts of the country. They dignity our aims as a nation. They convey also some idea of the importance of this New Art, so far largely devoted to immediate and urgent ends. They are now taken away from our problems and are a reminder of past efforts and of the true mission of the art to which they are devoted, and this noble cause and to the art of producing motion pictures.

“Fourth of July in France” Is Shown

THE celebration of America's Independence Day in France as shown in the two-series of views made by the French Pictorial Service and released in this country by the Pathe Exchange, is a fine illustration of the lasting feeling which is fostered by France for her sister republic.

The film opens with scenes in an Alsatian village where some American troops are resting. From the windows of this village are seen waving the Stars and Stripes as well as the tricolor flag of France; and the villagers dressed in their Sunday best are making merry on behalf of their American visitors, and have even organized a parade for the occasion.

In Paris the most stirring sights are to be seen as the military parade passes along the city's principal streets, including the avenue Champs Elysees, Trocadero and other avenues, now named for President Wilson, and the Place de la Concorde. The enthusiasm of the French girls and women expresses itself in the strewn of flowers in the pathway of our American boys, or in running forward to place the blossoms in their hands. The parade was headed by the mayor of Paris, and French cavalry and infantry were dispersed at intervals among the Americans. Among the prominent personages taking part in the proceedings were President Poincare and Marshal Joffre. These pictures are being exhibited at the Rialto theatre this week.

Film Production Continues to Decline

Board of Review Reports 1,010 Subjects Considered in 1918 Against 1,525 and 2,216 in 1917 and 1916.

THE production of motion pictures of a dramatic character continues to be more or less inactive. As a matter of fact, the review of pictures by the National Board of Review in the course of the first six months of 1918. The number of subjects reviewed in that period was 1,010 and the number of reels 3,171%. This means that the average length of picture was 3.14 reels. In the corresponding period in 1916 the production, according to the same source of information, was 2,216 subjects and 4,830 reels, the average length of each being 2.19 reels. In the corresponding period of 1917 the subjects numbered 1,525 and the reels 4,060%, the average length of each subject being 2.66 reels. A chart showing the production by subjects and reels covering the period of the three years would indicate that the general trend of production by months this year is parallel to that of 1916, while that of 1917 was irregular, reflecting the nervous condition of production while the Government was controlling the question of taxation of motion picture production and exhibition. That there may be a deficiency this year is perhaps indicated by the fact that old pictures are being reissued in larger numbers than usual judging from current reports.

LEON NETTER JOINS THE NAVY.

Leon D. Netter, prominent state right buyer, head of Masterpiece Film Attractions with offices in Cincinnati and Cleveland, is operating in the Navy and Kentu, now of the State Right Dist. Co., of the Netter State Right Distr. Co., of which Sol L. Lesser is president, has enlisted in the Navy, and started for San Francisco on August 5 to begin active service.

During this step Mr. Netter has been impelled solely by patriotism, for, while he is within the draft age, he is in Class 3 and therefore not liable to be called for service within the near future.

Until Seaman Netter returns George P. Jacobs, heretofore in charge of the Cincinnati office, will operate both the Cincinnati and Cleveland offices of Masterpiece Film Attractions.

War Tax No Bar to Motion Picture Business

World Pictures Exchanges Canvass Trade Territories and Report Exhibitors Undaunted by Tax Burden

DESIRING to ascertain the attitude of the picture theatre owners upon the probable increase of the war tax, and the effect this tax will have upon their business, a canvass was made by the exchange managers of the pictures in their respective territories, getting first hand opinions from the men who will have to collect whatever tax may be imposed by the law. The results will look on the increased tax as another means of not alone winning the war but of showing their desire to contribute to the nation's fund.—Chicago.

The theatre has always been a safety valve where the small trader can make his profit. Our people can be released through the efforts of entertainment. We Americans are highly emotional and when laboring under a big strain both mental and physical we go to the theatre to find relief.—Cincinnati.

Public Will Come Back, As It Always Does

"It may be for the first few days or even later three weeks that there will be a slight dropping off in attendance, but the public will come back as it always has done and the moving picture will attract as strong as it ever did."—Omaha.

"Every alert business man knows when things look black is just the time to make the biggest effort to boost his business. Any sensible man will not permit himself to drop in the dumps just because the way is a little rough. He takes another yank at his belt and goes against the game determined to smile and when he smiles he generally wins."—Atlanta.

There is a limit to human endurance and when this is reached the reaction sets in. Americans can stand just so much of a strain, and when this point is reached they go to the theatre. Experience has taught theatrical managers that the public has had pangs due to financial causes at first the public kept away from their theatres, but it was only for a short while, and then they came back in order to keep their minds off their business and to obtain relaxation.—Boston.

Everything Points to a Big Year.

"Everything points to a big year, notwithstanding the tax. Big crops, and plenty of money and America winning the war, all of these go to indicate the theatre managers had better brush up the standing room sign only and have it ready."—St. Louis.

This is a very different condition from that which some of our "professional" exhibitors would have us believe exists. We have been told that if the war tax on admissions was doubled practically half of the motion picture shows would have to close their doors. We have never believed any part of such calamity yarns because they have been made mainly by men of the war period who own no theatres that they could not possibly know what they were talking about. These tales have been taken up by leading men in the business and have been transmitted to Washington in an endeavor to prevent an increase of the admission tax.

From the messages quoted above we believe that we are getting nearer the truth of what the exhibitor thinks about the increase in taxation than has been gleaned from any of the dope uttered by our various "Calamity Janes."

Sunday Battle Still On in Lexington

Laymen's Committee Summon Theatre Employees in Effort to Prove Their Sabbath Work Unnecessary

A JURY in Magistrate Dodd's Court in Lexington, Ky., last week held that Sunday picture shows were necessary and killed the fight made by the laymen's Committee to close Sunday shows. Magistrate Dodd overruled efforts of the laymen's representatives to rule out all evidence relative to this question. Sunday shows were more charged or necessary than a step further in that he read Section 1321 of the Kentucky Statutes, embodying "the Old Blue Laws," and left it to the jury to decide whether Sunday shows were necessary or not. The laymen endeavored to win the case by merely showing that the blue laws had been violated.

The laymen when beaten in this case took another tack and a few days ago started things humming again. They summoned operators, ticket sellers and ushers, some ten persons in all, to investigate and see if they were not doing unnecessary work on the Sabbath. However, no magistrate in the city would handle the cases, some claiming that they had not been discussed the proposition and favored Sunday shows, while the laymen objected to the other magistrates. After the case had been transferred from court to court Magistrate Parrish finally transferred it to Magistrate Bolkin, at Coal Town, ten miles out in the county.

When the cases were called in this court, the cases were postponed until August 15, as several witnesses were absent. The cases were all filed against employees of the Berryman Realty Company, operating the Ben Ah Theatre. This concern was fined $2 in the first test case under a charge of violating the Blue Laws, whereas the Phoenix Amusement Company and J. H. Stumper, Jr., of the Orpheum Theatre, were cleared of the charge by the jury holding Sunday shows essential.

The case may be postponed until August 15 and in any event the theatres are continuing to operate on Sunday, and are daily securing a stronger feeling in their favor. The summonses are for J. A. Toisd, manager; Carl Neel, manager; Misses Ophelia and William Craig, ticket sellers; Thomas McQuinn, ticket taker, and Milton Hager, Oscar King, William Baxter, Thomas Miller and George Rose, ushers. An effort will be made to show that all of these employees are violating the Blue Laws in that they are doing unnecessary Sunday work.

The employees of the other theatres have not been summoned, as the Laymen's Committee has been unable to secure the names of the employees as yet.

Canadian Reel Tax Hits Small Houses

One Exhibitor Closes Down Four Nights and Shows 8,000 Feet of Film Saturdays.

The Canadian reel tax of 15 cents a reel a day seems to have hit the small town exhibitor rather badly. Every week there is a cry from some new section of the country that the special war assessment has put a decided crimp in the financial welfare of the rural exhibitor. Several outside exhibitors have been forced to cut down their shows in order to meet the new situation.

J. W. McCutcheon, proprietor of the Crystal Theatre, Oshawa, Ontario, has been compelled to close down three days of each week and he blames the fifteen-cent tax as the cause.

Walter H. Musson, proprietor of the Star Theatre, Hersper, Ontario, declares that the reel tax was "the last straw" as far as he was concerned. He decided to close down four nights of each week and give an eight-reel show on Saturdays. He now pays the Federal Government only $2.40 a week, but the Ontario Government is losing many dollars in admission war tax which it should collect from patrons. Mr. Musson pleads that the reel tax should have been graded so that it would not prove an injustice and a burden to the small town exhibitor.

Blackton Children Play French Refugees.

The two youngest but by no means least important players in the Audience Chamber are Stuart Blackton, directing in his production of "The Common Cause" are the producer's small children, Violet and Charles Stuart. As the small stars of the Country Life Series of short subjects, produced by Mrs. Blackton sometime ago and distributed by Vitagraph, they are among the well known children of the screen.
Bootleggers Thrive on Closed Sundays
But Nashville City Officials Continue Antagonistic to Opening Picture Theatres on Sabbath.

With city officials continuing in a vein of extreme obstinacy toward any move looking to the inauguration of Sunday moving pictures in Nashville, local amusement men have practically abandoned the idea of running the houses on Sunday for the present at least, in spite of the fact that a straw election conducted by a Nashville newspaper indicated the strong desire of the public for features on Sunday.

The Knickerbocker, Fifth avenue, and other houses opened for a few Sundays for the purpose of aiding the thrift stamp drive, charging no admission, entrance being gained by buying a thrift stamp at the box office instead of a theatre ticket. The stamps, of course, were retained by the purchasers, and no fee was collected at the door of the picture shows. This practice proved a heavy burden on the management of the houses, as salaries, lights and other operating expenses ran high, with no return.

The sixty-first annual Tennessee legislature convenes on January 1, 1919, at Nashville, and at that time it is very probable the legislative committee of the Tennessee Exhibitors' League, with headquarters at Memphis, will have ready some form of amendment to the Sunday closing statutes, permitting the operation of moving picture shows on Sunday. Nashville exhibitors have no intention of violating the law as it stands, but concessions could have been easily granted by the city officials looking toward furnishing amusement for the Government munitions plant workers on Sundays.

In speaking of the social conditions in Nashville since the coming of the great powder plant to Hadley's Bend, a suburb of Nashville, a sergeant at police headquarters declared that in spite of the bone dry law being in effect in Tennessee, the town in drunks on Saturday nights and Sundays has been very noticeable. Last week one of the heaviest drunk calendars recorded on the police blotter in many months was in evidence.

Much of this dissipation, according to officials at the police station, is the result of the powder plant men, some 25,000 of whom are employed at the plant, coming to town on Saturdays and Sundays seeking entertainment, and when they are unable to find any places of amusements on Sunday other than the public parks many of them seek out the bootlegging element for a little "liquid diversion." It is the opinion among those who are most familiar with conditions that the operation of the shows on Sunday would do much toward alleviating the heavy run on the police station blotter.

Metro's Treasurer Returns East.

Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation, has returned to New York after four months at Metro's West Coast studios supervising production activities. His most recent trip to the coast was his eighteenth, and he declared himself more reluctant than ever to come back east, although Metro's business interests demanded his return.

On the eve of his departure the Metro official was the guest of honor at a good-bye dinner held in a downtown Los Angeles cafe and attended by stars, executives, directors and other members of the producing staff at the Hollywood studios. The diners numbered more than sixty.

The evening was enlivened by the presence of a stringed orchestra, which played patriotic and popular airs during the dinner and furnished music for dancing which followed it.

May Allison and Bert Lytell, Metro stars, at present located on the West Coast, were seated at either side of the honor guest. Others attending were George D. Baker, manager of productions; Clifford Butler, studio manager; A. S. and Mrs. LeVino, Wilfred Lucas and Mrs. Lucas, Charles Hundt, Mr. Baker's assistant, and Horace Williams, casting director.

Fire in Kansas City Exchange Building

 Flames Start in Fox Quadrants from a Defective Wire, but Are Soon Controlled.

Fire broke out in the film vault of the Fox Film Company in the Ozark building, Kansas City, on July 24. A flaw in the electric light wire where the drop lamp was connected caused the wire to burn through and the hot end fell against the films. In a flash the flames leaped through the windows in the rear of the Ozark Building to the fourth floor and the Kleine-Edison offices. The flames bridged the alley to the building occupied by the Zahner Manufacturing Company on West Tenth street and did more damage there than where they started. The blaze was a tent which proved the Ozark to be fireproof. Elevators continued to operate till all of the occupants were out of the building.

In the Fox office considerable damage was done, but by closing the back court windows the fire was prevented from reaching the Mutual headquarters on the same floor. Mr. Edwards, manager of the Kansas City office of Kleine, rushed into the building and managed to close the fire doors and as a result no damage was done except in the workroom. World offices on the fourth floor with Kleine-Edison were also untouched.

Business went on as usual, as the loss sustained was not heavy, from the fact that practically all the films were either at work or in transit for exhibitors. The chief inconvenience was the total loss of advertising matter. This was offset by neighboring branch exchanges supplying the deficiency.

Exhibitors' Employees Pay Fines.

It costs at the present time twenty-five dollars in the New York courts to admit a child, unaccompanied by its parent or guardian, to a moving picture theatre, providing it is the defendant's first offense. Payment of the fine may be avoided by serving from five to ten days in the Tombs prison. A second offense doubles the amount of both fine or imprisonment.

Bernhard Levine, ticket taker of the Seventy-second Street Playhouse, pleaded guilty before Justices Edwards, Collins and Herman in the Court of Special Sessions to admitting Mary Huml, fourteen years old. He paid the fine. Anna Tarzian, cashier of the Palace Picture theatre, entered a similar plea for admitting Mark Rooney, twelve years of age, and also paid the fine. Louise DeCasaire, cashier of the Chatham theatre, Chatham Square, was convicted of admitting Margaret Topena, twelve years of age, and was given the alternative of twenty-five dollars or ten days in the Tombs. She paid the fine.

Metro Studio Dinner to Joseph W. Engel at Christopher's, Los Angeles, Before Mr. Engel Returned to New York.
Busy Planning for A. E. A. Convention

Messrs. Frank and Rembusch Are Progressing Favorably with Arrangements—Reconciliation of Opposing Organizations Sought.

LOUIS H. FRANK, Chairman of the A. E. A. convention committee and Frank & Rembusch, has been very busy on preconvention matters all week. It has been finally arranged that the Navy Relief Society and not the Chicago division of the Red Cross Society shall be the beneficiary of the net proceeds of the grand ball to be given Friday night, September 6, during the National Convention of the American Exhibitors' Association.

The navy band of the organization mentioned will furnish music during the evening, and Chief Yeoman R. J. Mason, of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, has arranged that the Jackies will appear in a series of laughable stunts between dances, while the ball is on.

Captain W. A. Moffet, commander of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, will be one of the invited speakers during the Chautauqua meetings held on the first three days of the convention.

A telegram was sent to William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, July 31, inviting the members of the organization to meet the A. E. A. during convention week. Telegrams were also sent out to Adolph Zukor, William Fox, Walter W. Irwin, Pat Powers, S. L. Rothapfel, Robert Lieber and others to come on and take part in the program.

Joseph Daniels, secretary of the navy, will be in Indianapolis September 3, and advantage has been taken of that fact by inviting him to come and address a composite gathering of the men in the moving picture business on propaganda work which must be carried on patriotically by the men in it.

Capt. H. Hooper, of Boston, national secretary-treasurer of the M. P. E. L. of A., and Dale Crittenden, of Indianapolis, have already made room reservations in the Hotel Sherman for the run of the convention. The Motion Picture Appliance Company, of Boston, has also reserved quarters in the hotel for the exhibition of a new moving picture projecting machine.

Messrs. Rembusch and Frank have devoted considerable time to arranging the program for the convention, and it is expected that it will be off the press in a few days.

These men are both strong for the reconciliation and amalgamation of the opposing exhibitors' factions. They wish to repeat and to repeat often, that the coming convention will be unlike any other that has yet been held by exhibitors. It is a convention for the entire trade, and the producing, distributing and supplies departments are cordially requested to co-operate and to participate in the proceedings.

MR. COHEN WRITES TO MR. SCHAEFER.

Mr. Peter Schaefer, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago:
My dear Mr. Schaefer: I am writing to let you know how very much I would like to help you make a big success of your presidency of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and you can depend on my helping you to the fullest extent.

Everything that happened at Boston is over with, in so far as I am concerned. What I had to say, I said to all of the delegates present, and it was intended as constructive criticism so we could build a real worthwhile foundation for amalgamation and the development and growth of our association. There are some defects in our bylaws, etc., that should be remedied, and no doubt you and the splendid executive committee you have associated with you will attend to this in due time. You have a tremendous opportunity, and from what everyone tells me you should be able to produce results, and while I am president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League I would be pleased to see the work come.
Bruton Would Put Limit on Feature Output

Pathe Executive Says Indications Are Market Will Be Over-Supplied—Outline of Company's Plans

I HAVE come to the conclusion that now is the time to place a definite limit on the output of features. This is the keynote of an important statement by Paul Bruton, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, in a statement given out this week by the Pathe Exchange. The statement was made in response to the query of six-reel features in excess of the demand by four to one. Mr. Bruton goes on to say, "and yet according to published announcement some of the big producers intend to place upon the market an increased number of five- and six-reel pictures. Indications are to the effect that the 1918-19 market will be super-saturated with so-called features. As increased outputs almost invariably mean a lessening in quality, exhibitors will soon face a situation where they will find themselves back to the old 'regular service' days, and attempts will be made to force them to play entirely programs which reflect the evils of a 'made on time' schedule. "We saw the trend of events and prepared for it. For a number of months we have been selecting the cream of our feature product. If a picture met with the severe tests of star, story, production and direction which we put upon it, we placed it on the holding plan with the intention of putting it out. Now we are fully prepared to enter the field of specialized features with a year’s supply of extra-selected star photoplays. We will release them one every feature week. The business of our selected booking plan, which we put into operation last March, was contributory to our decision. "The extra-selected star photoplays are positive box office attractions which will readily lend themselves to the highest type of exploitation methods. They do not constitute features we will put out. From time to time we intend to release others, the product of our present contributing studios and outside producers. We will release no features under the Pathe name, however, that do not fully satisfy us as to quality, and our plans do not contemplate a greater quantity than one Pathe feature every other week.

Will Continue to Release Outside Product.

"In addition to the classes of features which I have mentioned, it is our desire in addition to the regular, and regular or occasional release schedule such as the American Film Company’s star series featuring Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell. These 'outside' features would be of a different type and entirely apart and distinct from the Pathe features and should not be confused with the Pathe product. As has already been announced, the American features will be handled by the American’s own salesmen, operating independently of the exchange organization.

"The state of the market is and has been for some time such that it has been very difficult if not impossible to keep good features working continuously. Thus the obtaining of the optimum expectancy of returns on any feature has become impossible. There has been a fever haste to get business on the latest feature. In consequence those which have preceded have been almost, if not entirely forgotten. Many of the best features which have been made have been performed to be released and not been given the time and care which the available houses. By diminishing our feature output we can devote much more time to the marketing of each feature, to the careful study of the best exploitation methods for the exhibitor to use. Furthermore we can be certain of a much higher average of quality than is humanly possible under the one or more feature a week conditions.

"On September 22 we will release the first extra-selected photoplay, 'A Japanese Nightingale,' with Fannie Ward as the star. On October 20 will come 'The Bells,' with Frank Keenan as the star, playing the role created by the late Sir Henry Irving. Fannie Ward in ‘The Narrow Path,’ the A. H. Woods’ production, will be released on November 17. On December 15 comes Bryant Washburn’s ‘Tell Me Wrong,’ the best Washburn picture yet. Bessie Love is the star of ‘Carolyn of the Corners,’ to be released on January 12. On February 9 we will release Frank Keenan in a most powerful drama, for which we have not yet selected the title, but which we now know under the name of ‘The Sierras Mail.’"

Another Extra-Selected Star Photoplay is Fannie Ward in ‘Common Clay,’ the sensational A. H. Woods’ stage success which had such an extraordinary run.

"Thus we see that the Pathe Exchange is only able to announce for September 8 ‘Her Man,’ adapted from Charles Neville Buck’s well known novel ‘The Battle Cry.’

Krauss’ Jean Valjean is Remembered.

"On December 29 we will release the second of these Pathe Special Photoplays, ‘A Yakabong of France.’ Mr. Krauss will be remembered as the star of Pathe’s famous picture, ‘Les Miserables,’ and is an artist who has no superior. Pathe has not released any foreign made pictures in a long while, but ‘A Yakabong of France’ is such a superior and special production in every way that we have no hesitancy in giving it its highest praise.

"Our plans for a release of Extra-Selected Star Photoplays has already been selected, but the order of release after March 9 has not yet been determined upon.

"Needless to say we will continue to issue serials, comedies, and short lengths and dramas in the past, ‘Hands Up,’ with Ruth Roland, is to be released August 18. Present indications are that it will be a wonderful success. Pearl White has started work upon a new serial which will probably be released one each week, in the ‘Hands Up.’ "The Official War Review’ which we are putting out in one reel each week, is already tremendously popular. The tie-up between the Post Travel series and the newspapers is working to the interests of all and is making the pictures popular wherever they play.

"The Harold Lloyd comedies, good as they have been during the past, are showing a constant and highly pleasing improvement. We will continue to release them one every other week, each in one reel. We are fortunate to have been able to secure the services of Stan Laurel between the two theatrical engagements, and the Rolin company made for us five comedies with him as the star. The first of these was the released long before the third of October. Of course our news weekly is another of our short releases which is found on the programs of a majority of the theatres of the country.

"Our plans for the coming year were completed so many weeks ago that we are now in the enviable position of being months ahead on our prints, posters and advertising matter. We expect to have our features in the exchanges a long time, and we do not think the value of this to the exhibitor and exhibitor is obvious.

We are convinced that we are working along the right lines, and have been greatly pleased to note the enthusiasm our exchange shows and the continued efforts of the exhibitor and exhibitor is obvious.

"It augurs well for Pathe business during the coming season that the last three months have been the biggest in our history."

What Los Angeles Exhibitors Are Doing

Big Improvement at Tally's—Theatre Men Hold Luncheon—Shamrock Theatre Has a Fire.

Improvements at Tally's Broadway.

CARPENTERS and painters have been busy for the last three weeks at Tally's Broadway theatre, making many novel and effective improvements in the house. An entirely new stage setting has been built, and with the new electrical apparatus that has been installed, the enlarged orchestra pit, and the new chairs for the entire house that are on their way from New York, to say nothing of the special features now being booked for early showing, Tally's Broadway will be one of the most attractive and effective features of its kind in the city. The opening week's receipts have been very encouraging.

Theatre Men's Luncheon.

The Theatre Owners' Association gave a luncheon at the Hamburger Cafe on July 24 at noon, at which Governor Stephens, Edward Cowan, state commander of the Four- Minute Men; Marshall Simmons, Sheriff Cline, Judge Craig, Mayor Brown, Manager Doolittle, and Thomas H. Pate, president of Ampico Corporation, were guests of honor. The entertainment was presided over by Frank A. MacDonald, and was one of the bi-weekly banquets at which the association, which represents the principal motion picture exhibitors of Southern California, entertains its guests.

Film Explosion at Shamrock Theatre.

When a news weekly film caught fire in the Shamrock theatre projection room, the explosion was so powerful that C. T. Sewell, operator, was forcibly expelled from the booth and rolled down the stairs, as far as he could catch himself. The fire started an automatic sprinkler, and the worst damage was done by the water. No one was seriously injured, although when Mrs. N. L. Smith, cashier of the theatre, grabbed the day's cash receipts and cored out to the audience that there was no danger, and for the people to take their time in going out, there was almost a stampede. The fire was out by the time the fire department got to the scene, and the damages to theatre, projection machine and furniture is approximately at $3,000.

Smoke Room at Kinema.

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., manager of the Kinema theatre, has established a smoking corner for devotees of the weed among his patrons, who may hereafter sit back at ease in that part of the balcony set apart for them and see a good show while puffing away on cigar, cigarette or pipe. Handsome new chairs upholstered in dull blue alligator, and a novel lighting arrangement makes the corner very attractive.

Miller and Leonhardt in Chicago.

Fred Miller and Leonhardt Leonards of Miller's new theatre going up at Eighth and Main streets, made a hurried and very mysterious trip to Chicago recently, supposedly in connection with apprenticeships for the new house.

Newsboys Noisily View "Pershing's Crusaders."

More than five hundred newsboys were guests of the Alhambra theatre and the Express-Tribune, a Los Angeles daily, in the week of July 21. When the organist, Miss Gay Weaver, played all the patriotic airs in her repertoire during the unreeling of "Pershing's Crusaders," the boys took up the chorus of each song with noise and enthusiasm, and some melody. Several of the boys were accompanied by their little sisters, and a few by their dogs, all of whom were admitted and no questions asked. The boys were guests—privileged at that—and everything was done by the Alhambra management and the Express-Tribune to make their enjoyment complete.

The Superba theatre is proudly and patriotically displaying a new American flag in front of the house, that is the envy of the other playhouses in the downtown district. The flag is 24 by 36 feet, and is the largest on Broadway. Fred Miller, owner of Miller's theatre, has returned from a trip to San Francisco.

Los Angeles Exchanges.

William Alexander, district manager for the William L. Sherry Service, has definitely arranged for the first run of the Sherry features in Los Angeles, and has gone on a trip that will cover all the West Coast exchanges. Mr. Alexander will devote considerable time to the San Francisco and Seattle branches before he returns to Los Angeles.

Louis Hyman, formerly connected with the All-Star Theatre, Inc., of Philadelphia, has assumed management of that corporation's branch office in Los Angeles, upon the retirement of Irving M. Lesser, who has taken a position in Uncle Sam's army.

Helen Keller to Make a Novel Picture

Famous American Woman Will Produce Humanitarian Subject Carrying Message to Whole World.

H ELEN KELLER, famous the country over for having overcome three of the most dreaded afflictions of the human race, blindness, dumbness and deafness, is in Los Angeles preparing to make a great humanitarian film that will carry a message from her to the whole world.

Miss Keller, professor of philosophy, teacher, author and scientist, is making a film in which she will illustrate her message. Miss Keller has engaged as material, free of cost, Miss Keller in her picture; and by a number of business and professional associates.

Dr. Edward Liebfried, of New York, is the organizer and business adviser of the Helen Keller Film Corporation, and is a strong believer in Miss Keller's success. She has been tested for the screen, and it has been found that her personality and appeal, dominant features of her personal appearance, reflects well from the film.

Work on the novel picture will be started with in a few days at the Robert Bruston studios.

Ford Serial Progressing.

The fifteen episode serial which Francis Ford has written and is directing is now under way, with Ford himself as the leading character, that of a detective, and a cast including Mae Gaston, Elsie Van Name, Otto Hill, Francis Feeney, Duke Worne, Pete Gerald, Jerry Ashe and John Thwaitte. Much of the action of the story is laid in Egypt.

Off to War.

Ernie Shields, actor-soldier husband of Betty Schade, Universal leading woman, has been transferred from Fort Mc Arthur, near Los Angeles, where Betty could see him every week, to an eastern cantonment.

Jack Blackwell, scenic artist at the Golden West studios in Glendale, has joined the aviation division of the army, and is in training at Arcadia. G. M. Anderson, head of the Golden West Company, assured Jack his position would be waiting for him when he returns from the war with a handful of tail feathers from the German eagle.

Al Cohn, Mary Pickford's personal representative, is about to join the army, and is winding up his business affairs before he goes.

Dr. Lloyd Mace, emergency physician at Universal City, has joined the Hospital Corps of the Allied armies, and will soon depart for France.

Richard Marshall, former treasurer of the Majestic theatre, is in training at Camp Kearny.

Fred Putnam, for years floor manager at Pantages vaudeville and motion picture playhouse, has been called to the colors, and the Pantages' service flag boas another star.
Irving M. Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the All-Star Features, has gone to work for Uncle Sam. In a new eastern paper, he has enlisted in the balloon school at Arcadia, Cal.

Etinge Honin' for Work.

Julian Etinge has completed his house at Silver Lake, and has furnished it with rare old furniture and tapestries which he brought from his old New York home. He has also planted a fair sized war garden, and his classic features have become tanned and burned to an almost unrecognizable condition.

Etinge has entered into a partnership with Fred J. Bal- shover. Miss Etinge is expected back from New York in a few days, when the pair will begin preparations for the filming of Etinge's stage successes, "The Fascinating Widow," "Cousin Lucy," and "The Son of the Desert." He has not yet begun the whole of his pictures, as he wishes to complete all the productions planned before his vaudeville tour begins on January 1, 1919. While he is waiting, the actor is writing his experiences from the time he started in vaudeville several years ago until now, taking in his tours through France and Germany. In the meantime he is expecting his father and mother to visit him in the near future.

Gladys Brockwell a Bride.

Another romantic wedding that links the film world with the war is that of Gladys Brockwell, Fox star, to Harry Edwards, former director at Triangle, but for the last six months in training at Camp Lewis. Miss Brockwell, during a short vacation granted her from the studio, went to American Lake for a visit, and while there was persuaded to become Mrs. Edwards. His army service was sent to France. The pair went to Seattle to be married, and after a few days' honeymoon Miss Brockwell came back to Los Angeles to begin work on her new picture, "The Strange Woman."

Fall Down a Canyon.

Jack Oaker, husband of Belle Bennett, Triangle star, who has been at his home in Santa Monica on sick leave from the San Pedro Submarine Base, fell off an embankment near his home on July 24, and was found in an unconscious condition near the spot where he went over the edge of the canyon. Oaker was taken to a hospital at Venice, where the physicians said he was suffering from a concussion of the brain. No one was with him at the time of his fall. After a day or two at the hospital he recovered rapidly, and was dismissed in another few days.

Mme. Yorska has arrived in Los Angeles, and has made known the fact that she is under a three years' contract with the Matzene Feature Film Company, and that her productions will range from tragedy and romance to comedy and modern to classic and romantic. Mme. Yorska is co-producer for Mme. Yorska are two of Gertrude Atherton's novels, "The Doomed Woman" and "Tower of Ivory." Work will be started on the first picture in a few weeks at the Brunton studios.

Golden West Policy.

An announcement has been made by the officials of the Golden West Photoplay Company of their intention to limit the yearly production of film plays at the Glendale studios to eight five-reel features, starring G. M. Anderson, formerly known on the screen as Broncho Billy. This policy was adopted under the suggestion of Mr. Anderson and Jesse J. Robbins, director of productions. The first of the new Anderson features will soon be released under the title "Paradise of a Gun," and will be followed by "Red Blood and Yellow."

Studio Club Gives Tea.

Lois Weber was hostess at a tea given by the Studio Club of Hollywood last Sunday, at which two hundred guests were present. Miss Weber gave a brief talk on the work being done by the Motion Picture War Relief Association. She was assisted by her sister, who is also her secretary, and by Mildred Harris, and plans were made for a dance and entertainment to be given by the Studio Club in honor of the men stationed at the Officers' Training School at Hollywood.

Christie Comedies for August.

Acting on the belief that changes are welcome now and then in all kinds of films, Al E. Christie, director of the Christie Comedies, is trying out a number of new ideas, and a different and distinct note of originality that extends from little to big piece has been added to all of the Christie comedies for August.

Dorothy Dane and Bobby Vernon sound the first new note in the August 5 release, which is called "Just Plain Whims." The release for August 26 gives Ethel Lynne a new support in the person of "Smiling" Billy Mason, in a light and airy fun vehicle entitled "You Can't Believe Everything."

Whitman Bennett in Town.

Whitman Bennett, general all-around factotum of the Paramount-Artcraft offices in New York, is in Los Angeles consulting with the higher undergraduate executives. It is four years since Mr. Bennett was in Los Angeles, and he found many changes when he arrived at the Lasky plant on Vine street. The converted garage where Cecil B. De Mille was making films a few years ago has grown and spread out until it covers the whole block, and last week William De Mille was forced to go over on the Fairbanks lot to stage a picture because of lack of room. Mr. Bennett will make an indefinite stay in Southern California.

Little Mary Still Out of Work.

Mary Pickford is still receiving offers. Metro is said to have approached Little Mary with its hat in one hand and some $2,000,000 in the other, all of said money to be paid for either six or eight pictures. The First National Exhibitors have respectfully tendered an offer of $250,000 each for eight productions. Goldwyn is supposed to be loading up a truck of simonoids and getting ready to make an offer.

It has been suggested that Charlie Murray, the well known auctioneer of the films, be put in charge of the case and auction Mary off.

Tars Entertained by Stars.

Three thousand of Uncle Sam's sailors who are being trained at the Submarine Base were entertained by a company of screen and stage stars who offered their services as a patriotic privilege on the night of July 23, with a monogramed performance of the United States Women's War Relief, with Mrs. Lilian Brockwell and her daughter Gladys of the Fox studios as sponsors, and Herbert Hayes, of the Bessie Barriscale Company as stage manager. The show was given on the stage built up inside of the barrack by the Fox company.

Fred Stone of Lasky did some of his cleverest and nimblest dancing. Julian Etinge appeared in his swellest gown and his sweetest voice. Wallace Reid was there with a number of different musical instruments.

Algie Forrest and Smiling Billy Mason put on a funny stunt of great originality.

William Desmond, Herbert Hayes and Mildred Hellen staged a tabloid of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram."

Bonita, a stage comedienne, Rena Rogers, and Pete Malone, a sailor boy, sang.

Personally Conducted by Glebier.

LADIES and gentlemen, the group of pea green buildings at the foot of the hill are your movie houses. I am your conductor. As you descend the hill to your car, please note that those who are now descending are the William S. Hart studios.

No, lady, in spite of the fact that William S., or Bad Bill Hart, as he is usually called, has made his name a household word because of his realistic depiction of many lawless characters and woolly west, none of the meanness has been soaked up by his system. In reality he is as gentle as a lamb, and family circle.

An interesting circumstance that gives a true insight to the real self of this popular player is found in the location of his studio. The name of this thoroughfare we are now traversing, and on which the Hart plant is located, is Elifie street, as your may observe. From this it is evident that pictures can only be portrayed successfully by men with bad hearts. No player would have ever selected a street with the sweet and simple name of Elle. If he were not a gentle and kindly soul himself.

In one of the smaller hotels, a shirt that covers the bosom of the desperate desperado of Dead Man's Gulch may hide a heart with a braver and finer life than to the higher and more esthetic things of life may be located immediately under the eye of the stage coach. At the foot of the hill, there to await the stage coach with foul intent, may be concealed beneath the yellowed and spotted parts of the lone bandit of the films.

Since Mr. Hart stages most of his pictures out-of-doors, it is seldom that canny Mr. Hart has just returned from a location trip to the Mexican border, and by special arrangement we may watch him at work on interior stuff for a few minutes.

Step this way, please. The sounds of canine conflict emanating from the corridor are the results of the ambition of a youthful bull pup who thinks he can lick an Airsdale terrier that loafs around the place. The pup tries it every day at this hour.

One of the first things being made for Mr. Hart's next picture, which will be called "Border Wireless," the story of which he has already given us an outline.

As you will observe, the set is very carefully built up. All Hart's sets are this way. Not every set is under the kind of use.

Here represents a post office, telegraph, express, railway, freight and ticket office, a combination found very often in the south-west.

The young lady behind the counter telling the man he must sign a book because he is not a member of the club. Having been shipped somewhere is Wanda Hawley, the leading lady of the piece. The petite role is well suited to her. Short, Charles Arling and Jimmie Mason are also in this scene.

The man with the straw hat, and whiskers, just to mix in the story, is Eric von Ritzau, the villain, who has the part of a Swiss spy. Hart noticed that Mr. Hart directs his own pictures.

Mr. Hart is one of the few favorites of the films who has actually lived the life he portrays. He went to the Klondike and brought up in Dakota in her wildest and woolliest days. Chasing the grizzly bear and the首饰 into the bush and hog cat to their hair was his daily pastime.

These stirring experiences which filled his days and nights have caused him to put an essence of reality and truth to films that no other player whose ideas of life of boyhood was formed in the school of Kingles's "Westward Ho" and the works of the late J. P. Cooper could ever hope to attain.

Much of Bill's childhood was spent with the Sioux Indians of Dakota, and he speaks the Sioux language like a native redskin. Bill finds this very helpful at times. When he desires to metamorphose himself into a grizzly bear or a ravening avenger, he repeats the follow-words: "We sha sha sha sha. Phillips is a very bad man," and immediately he finds himself in the proper mood.

He reached the next point of interest, a few words on the street nomenclature of Los Angeles will not be amiss.

We are now traveling on one of the main thoroughfares of Los Angeles, El Camina Real, meaning the King's Highway in English. Many of the names given to our streets are derived from some citie, such as Figueroa, El Centro, Loma, Mari- posa and Paloma, still remain in the place. We can, however, turn out many streets made, the more poetic names of the male and female relatives of the estate have remained as a memorial of them.

Witness Effie, whom we have just left. No one with the soul of a poet can deny that such names as Effie, Elizabeth, Henry, Ezra, Hostetter, Gertrude and Gladys are more appealing and tickles the ear drum to a greater extent. Many are those who find the names of Spanish origin.

We now find ourselves at the Sunset studios, the erstwhile home of the Triangle players. A number of companies are located here, including the D. W. Griff- th organization.

Clara Kimball Young has just completed arrangements for this place, while poor but proud Pasadena makes up its mind whether or not she will be allowed to move in. Many of the business and working people of Pasadena want the Young studio, but the decision is left in the management's place say, while preachers are thundering denunciation from their pulp- pits against the activities of the studio.

The stage in front of us is set for Dorothy Gil, who has blossomed out as a stage actress. Dorothy's director is Miss Mabel's sister. The man shooting bil- lards in the other set is George Silberstein, a famous vaudeville star. Within the studio, he has canceled his engagement with D. W. Griffith and signed up with Chaplin. Silberstein will shortly go to France where he will play a part in the greatest drama the world has ever seen.

The mayor's daughter, the lady with the papers is none other than D. W. Grif- th's wife. "Nothing can damage me," he says, and it has made some excellent movies in his day, including "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Wobblers." He is now working on a serial film to be released through the Art- craft program.

Appreciating Mr. Griffith from the left is Bobby Harron, Bobby, who is one of our most popular player's, has just had a severe accident.

Some weeks ago a hirsute growth appeared on his upper lip. After a period of self-cultivation, developed into a mustache—small, it is true, but nevertheless a swell. That was plainly bloke across a moderately wide street.

Immediately, wanted desperados in the guise of friends began making securious remarks about the mustache. Others took it up, and soon the town was agog to joke about Bobby's mustache. A cer- tain newspaper writer named Price guied him in the columns of his sheet. Mr. Harron, being of a shrinking disposition, began to think he had done some- thing criminal. He was bounded and bawled out. He has sought for safety from ridicule in a safety, and laid his beautiful mustache under the gal- lettine. Studio Shorts

THEDA BARA and her company, in charge of J. Gordon Edwards, went to town last week to make scenes for a new feature.

Gladys Brockwell was hostess at the Sunday canteen held at the Mason opera house. At the table were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Mary Ann, mother of Bertha Mann, and Vera Lewis. The guests of honor were Wallace Reid and Grace Darmond, and Mrs. Wallace Reid poured tea. Miss Walthall, sister of Henry B., is playing an important role in a forthcoming Harry Carey production.

Paul Willis, playing juvenile leads in the G. M. Anderson features, is yet under military age, but he has joined the Hollywood School, so as to be ready when he does become old enough to join the real army.

A secret and popular vote has been cast at these studios for the best film colony to determine the leader of the grand march at the Film Players Ball at the Hollywood. The winners are: Stars were barred, but character actors, members of stock companies and extras with nothing all. George Melford has found Lila Lee and a company of thirty-four Laskyites to Catalina Islands, where scenes for "Worse Than a Tiger," a true story taken on the cap- tured German Raider "Agassiz," recently overtaken on the high seas by naval ves- sels.

Tuero Aoki has written a child's play which, when produced, will have as its star little "Dorothy Gil." The new film, in the latest Susque Hayakawa production has earned the little actress much commendation.

Frank Elliott, formerly with the Theda Bura Fox company, has gone over to Uni- versal.

Winston Cross, regular stage actor, has canceled his vaudeville engagements to take part in a picture being made on this west coast.

Jack Mulhall wants to be godfather to a few divisions of Red Cross nurses.

Herbert Warren, for some time past through absence, is now back in the town, is going back into vaudeville with his wife, Valerie Bergere.

Charles Chaplin and Mildred Harris became engaged. They are engaged to be married, all rumors to the contrary not- withstanding, and despite rumors that they are frequently seen together. Both admit that they are good friends, how- ever.

Arthur Hoyt, former casting director at Triangle, has been appointed as casting director at Universal City. Hoyt has just been made an important part of the "Yellow Dog."}

Mae Murray has been asked by Secre- tary Melody to make a propaganda film for the Fourth Liberty Loan drive, and she has dropped all other work to make the picture for the Govern- ment.

Eddie Laemmle, besides being newly appointed assistant to Director Jack vil- len is also an officer at the Hollywood Officers' Training School on two nights a week.

Fay Tincner has recently engaged to take part in the Billy Parson comedies.

Rollin S. Sturgeon will direct Moore Salisbury's coming feature for the Blue- den pictures.

Neil Shipman, Vitagraph star, is writing a scenario to be produced by an Inde- pendent concern this fall.

Mrs. Oliver Monroe and Marie Dresdier have been elected members of the board of directors of the Stage Women's War Relief.

Mary Miles Minter, her mother and sister, was on a film location recently in Oregon, filming scenes for the movie "An Evening with Mary Minter." The family is expected to return to New York where they will remain while before accepting any other engagement.

Mary Pickford made a farewell visit to Camp Kearny last week and took along a print of her latest Artcraft film, "Johanna Enlists," in which "her regiment" shares honors with "her comrades," her boyhood friends. She and her godsons before they all leave for France.

Miss Polk Merritt, a young society queen of Los Angeles, appears in an important part in Dorothy Phillips' new picture, "This Morning Again." Winifred Westover has returned from the American studios at Santa Barbara, where she played leading parts in two of the recent William Russell productions, "Hobbs in a Hurry" and "All the World to Nothing."

Mrs. W. Jay Eddy was the first Los Angeles film actress to enlist with Uncle Sam. Helen is now leading woman in the stock company at Camp Kearny.

Carmel Myers is back at Universal City after a six-weeks' trip through the east and various southern army camps.

Lila Todd Smith, who was be said to be a full-fledged film star. She has bought a car and has had a wreck.

Parsons Ends His Eastern Vacation

GOLDILOCKS and the Comedian Stops Off in Cleveland and Gives the Young Natives a Sweet Treat.

S MILLING BILL," Parsons, hero of Capitol Comedies, is on his way to his Hollywood studio to resume the work interrupted when the vacation lure called him East several weeks ago. Upon his arrival on the West coast he will at once begin his thirteenth comedy for Goldwyn distribution. Before he came East he completed enough scripts to carry his releases to October 7.

Though the comedian was unable to cross-country trip properly for pleasure, he found time for business. And in Cleveland, on his way back, he combined business and pleasure and found fun and profit. Two personal appearances at the Cleveland theater he served to introduce him to a thousand motion picture fans who had never seen him in the flesh and luncheons and other entertainments made his stay doubly pleasant.

The second part of his day in Cleveland in the offices of Goldwyn's branch, where H. A. Bandy, the manager, introduced him to a score of exhibitors. At noon there was a luncheon at the Hollenden Hotel, attended by representatives of all the local newspapers and half a dozen theater owners and managers. At 3 o'clock the comedian appeared at the Stillman before a full house and was warmly received.

The fun for Bill came later in the afternoon, however. Having loaded the tonneau of his automobile with small boxes of candy, Parsons and his party visited the Jewish Orphans Home, where his appearance, duly heralded, totally upset the routine of the orphans and the youngsters a joyous hour. Bill made a speech advising all the little boys and girls to be good orphans. He said he had wanted all his boyhood to be an orphan but had never had any luck.

The comedian's next stop was at St. Joseph's Orphans' Home, where there was another enthusiastic reception. Each child there, upon being presented to the comedian, made a pretty little curtsey and walked over to Bill and got a doll or a box of candy. Then all of them sang hymns and Bill said he had had a great time.

At both places motion pictures were taken by the camera- men of the Cleveland Moving Picture Magazine. These were later shown in scores of theaters in Cleveland and throughout northern Ohio.

Commodore Kirby, of the Cleveland Yacht Club, invited Parsons to dine with him at the club in the evening. Another movie was made at the club of the comedian being welcomed by the commodore and a bunch of his "beauties." Bill got the best looking one for a dance partner and passed the others on.

Another comic was the initiating him into the mysteries of California steps, leaving off only long enough to be whisked again to the Stillman, where, despite the rain, another packed house greeted him.

George Davis Hooks Up with Lesser

General Manager of Mid West Hearts of the World Company Formerly Was Manager of Alcazar.

A PROMINENT film visitor to New York during the past week was George H. Davis, general manager of Mid West Hearts of the World Company. Davis for the past twenty years has been prominently identified with amusement enterprises in the West and was recently business manager of the Alcazar theater in San Francisco. He is, however, disposed of his other interests to become associated with Sol L. Lesser in handling the twenty-two states for which Mr. Lesser secured rights to "Hearts of the World."

The executives of the Mid West Hearts of the World Company consist of Mr. Davis and Mr. Lesser, and an office will be opened in Chicago with Mr. Davis in charge, from which territory consisting of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, North and South Dakota, Wyoming, Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas, will be handled.

The remainder of the territory, consisting of the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, and Arizona, will be handled from San Francisco by Mr. Lesser as president of All Star Feature Distributors, Inc.

The present plans call for the placing of twenty companies in each of these territories, each company carrying complete equipment for the presentation of this production, including orchestras averaging twenty pieces. In the San Francisco office Mr. Lesser will have charge of contracts for prints, while Edward B. Rosenberg of that city, the organization of the road companies. In the Chicago office H. O. Martin, formerly handling special productions for Selig, Clune, and other producers, will be in charge of contracts for prints. Fred K. Rosen, the time manager of Luna Park, is in charge of organization.

Under an arrangement with Mr. Lesser, Mike Rosenberg of the De Luxe Feature Films, Seattle, one of Mr. Lesser's associates in State Feature Films, Inc., has been associated in the handling of "Hearts of the World" for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

General to Observe O. Henry Birthday

On Author's Fifty-fifth Anniversary Distributing Company Will Release Sixty-fourth Adaptation.

GENERAL FILM is planning to observe the fifty-fifth anniversary of the birth of William Sydney Porter, A. K. A. O. Henry, of Houston, Texas, by releasing the sixty-fourth screen version of the noted author's inimitable stories. While the name of the story to be filmed for this purpose has not been announced, it is expected that it will be one of the strongest and most popular of the several hundred short stories written by O. Henry.

This will be the second film observance of O. Henry's birthday anniversary. Last September General Film Company issued the several four-reel O. Henry subjects which marked the most ambitious step yet taken in the work of creating a living library of the author. The best of the stories for two-reel production are now filmed as Broadway features for General Film Company.

No other writer, living or dead, has ever been honored by having such an extraordinary large number of his stories pictured, and plans for the coming month will set this figure at a much higher level. It is announced.

"The screen versions of the O. Henry stories have more than duplicated the huge success enjoyed by these stories in their original form," said a General Film official. "The history of O. Henry is already numbered in the millions before the first picture was photographed. The interest has been increased by many millions, in fact, the army of O. Henry film fans is many times larger than the original army of O. Henry admirers. This fact is indicated by the tremendous number of pictures which were in progress when the first story was filmed. Nearly 3,000,000 copies of his books have been sold to date, and there seems to be no prospect of a let up in the demand. More than one million copies of his books were sold in England in one season."

FOX BUYS "THE ROAD TO BERLIN."

The announcement is made that William Fox has purchased "The Road to Berlin," by Gladys Wright-Ukers, for production by William Farnum. Work probably will begin after the completion of the Zane Grey books which have just been bought by Fox. The author of the one Zane Grey book, "Riders of the Purple Sage," which will be released in September, and is now at work on another, "The Rainbow Trail," also scheduled for early release. The two other Greer novels which he will film are "The Lone Star Ranger" and "The Last of the Duanes."
Commission Ousts Major Funkhouser
After Trial of Five Weeks the Merit Board Finds Him Guilty on Brief Survey of Testimony.

THE hearing of the Funkhouser trial ended Monday afternoon, July 30, having occupied just about five weeks. The city civil service commission board ruled at the conclusion, that Mr. Funkhouser has not met the charges of negligence, improper efficiency, neglect of duty or insubordination. It is lamentably true that Major Funkhouser's downfall is thought by various workers in the civil service system to be due to orders from the ruthless and audacious political machine that rules Chicago. Major Funkhouser's real offense, it is widely believed, was independenced of the city hall politicians, a determined to castigate the good name of the city and the best of his ability.

Lease Ground for Randolph Theatre
Jones, Linick & Schaefer Are Building a Beautiful "Loop" House Where Top Notch Pictures Only Will Be Shown.

T HE firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer has secured a long-term lease on the new building at 1416 West Randolph street, where the El Mar Cafeteria had a short-lived existence. The location is one of the best on Chicago's "Loop," being only a few doors from State street and about as many from the Colonial Theatre.

This valuable lease gives this old established firm a fine opportunity to build a modern theatre for moving pictures which is designed to become a landmark in Chicago as well known as the Orpheum on State street.

The new theatre will be known as the Randolph. Work has already been started on the structure, the well-known architect Henry L. Newhouse being intrusted with the designing of the plans and their carrying out.

As the present foundations were laid for a ten-story building not quite a year ago, much time will be saved in compparing the Randolph, and all the new building's ready-ness for opening some time in November. Architect Newhouse has been given carte blanche in the construction, interior scheme and decorations, so that the Randolph will doubtless be what its owners intend it to be—the leading and the most beautiful moving picture theatre in the "Loop."

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have been waiting long for just such an opportunity, as it will give them a Loop theatre, where only class moving pictures can be shown exclusively.
At the present writing the seating capacity of the Randolph cannot be definitely given, but it is expected that it will be 1,000 seats, more or less.

Healy, Wizard of South Halsted Street
Texas Turns Five-Cent, Rundown Theatre in Cheap Neighborhood into Successful Business Venture.

T HERE is always a new way to shelve the older order of things if we could only get the insight, or vision, just as R. A. Healy, owner of the Monogram Theatre, 3520 South Halsted street, Chicago, happily convinced his friends and neighbors recently.

Mr. Healy hails from Texas, and he came all the way to Chicago to make a success as an exhibitor. Strange to say he elected to settle on South Halsted street, where cheap picture theatres and still cheaper buildings abounded. No one before Healy arrived ever thought of charging over five cents in the vicinity of the Monogram. That theatre, when he bought it, being only a few doors from State street, was really a picture house, nothing but a dance hall, and no one seemed to notice. But Texas Healy's talisman changed all that, and his neighbors are still rubbing their eyes to find out whether they are dreaming or not.

Mr. Healy's first move was the purchase of a five thousand-dollar organ for his house of 432 seats. Then he rented the best pictures he could secure, clothed his lobby with attractive artistic posters and ran up the admission from 5 cents to 10 and its limits. Result: He has been showing to capacity, as a rule, ever since, because his patrons know that he is giving them their money's worth right at home, saving them the extra expense of going to the "Loop."

Andrew Karzas Shows Novel Film.

Such an official, managing director of the Woodlawn Theatre Company, gave his patrons a novel treat last week by running off "The Honor Roll," a short film of about 700 feet, which shows the soldiers from the Seventh Ward now fighting in France, also enlisted men from that district now training at Fort Logan camps. The film was made from still photographs of the men which had been obtained from relatives. The moving picture showed the men in natural size, the name and present address of each being shown in connection. Miss Caracci's film gave much pleasure to the relatives and friends of the boys on the first three days of its run.

Siele Film Exchange Is New Name.

The Greierv & Herz Film Exchange, with headquarters in the Consumers' Building, was reorganized last week when Lee Herz, the treasurer and member of the firm, purchased the stock held by S. B. Greierv, president of the concern. Mrs. Herz, who has succeeded the retiring president, announces that the former policy of real estate will remain unchanged under the new title, Siele Film Exchange. President Herz announces he will give up in the near future some important news regarding new features which will be produced by his organization and the policy of expansion started under the name of Greierv & Herz.

"Hearts of the World" at the Colonial continues its remarkable success without any signs of fading interest. To the contrary, indeed, the long lines of eager people waiting for their turn at the side of the theater get to the box office. Lord dandy wonderment not only to out-town visitor, but to old-time residents of the city as well. It is a great tribute to the master director of moving pictures.

Mutual Buys "Little Orphant Annie." "Little Orphant Annie," a five-reel Selig feature, has been purchased by the Mutual Film Corporation and will be released in the near future. The story is based on James Whitcomb Riley's poem and one of the poet's famous short stories, the adaptation being made by Colen Campbell, who directed "Olive." It has created a fine film version which is worthy of being ranked as a classic.

George Kleine Has New Italian Feature.

George Kleine recently appointed Wallie Decker, a publicity man in this city, to take his new Italian picture, "Italy Behind the Lines," to Washington, where it will be given a special showing to military, navy, Italian officials, the Italian Ambassador and other prominent people. This fine picture, in seven reels, will be a revelation to Americans. It shows the marvelous industrial war activities which are now being carried on in Italy—from the manufacture of monster field guns, war planes, motor trucks, tanks, etc., to the making from gigantic iron ingots of the barbed wire used on the border of No Man's Land. I had a more-than-perfect view of Italy, and I was never more deeply interested, but positively amazed. It will be released in the near future.

Attractions at Orchestra Hall.

Elise Ferguson in "The Danger Mark" was a big drawing feature at Orchestra Hall for the week beginning July 28. She is one of the leading actresses in the nation. These were the last performances before President Wilson's residence. The reviews were splendid, and the officers and gentlemen in attendance were delighted. This was a jolly "Honeymoon." In this picture Captain Robert Warwick made his last appearance as leading man before enlisting. Captain Warwick is now serving on General Pershing's intelligence bureau in France.

"The Geezer of Berlin" at Casino.

"The Geezer of Berlin" (Universal-Jewel) was shown at the Casino, on West Madison street, in the "Loop," last week, and drew fine business. "Really, everybody ought to see it," writes Kitty Kelly in the Herald-Examiner. "It isn't perfect, but then how can you expect a real film for the sake of the flashes of genius that prevail—and it is jolly good fun." Aid for Salvation Army Workers Near Front.

The big picturc recently shown at the Armour estate, Lake Forest, in aid of the women workers of the Salvation Army's new headquarters near the front in France, was given a grand reproduction at the Auditorium, Saturday evening, July 27, in support of the same worthy cause. The spacious building was filled to overflowing and most of Chicago's best known people were present. The handsome sum of $18,000 was netted, and every penny of it will be turned over to the Salvation Army's devoted men and women who minister in a wonderful way to the needs and comfort of the brave boys at the front.

Goldwyn Vice-President Visits City.

Harold Bolster, vice-president of Goldwyn, arrived in the city from New York, Wednesday, July 24, and after stopping over for a few hours departed for Detroit.

Timely Programs at Strand and Rivoli

British War Features Overshadow Dramatic Subjects as War Starts Fifth Year.

The fourth anniversary of the entrance into Europe's world conflict of Great Britain and dependencies was observed yesterday by showing for the first time of the leading moving picture houses of New York starting Sunday, August 4, with notable performances. The composite effect of watching one right after the other would make any man of varying interests almost completely forget that the direct pleasure enjoyed by the fine exhibition of well-chosen subjects, was the latent suggestion of still more impressive and beautiful possibilities of this New Art we know as filmography, but we are not completely without appreciation of the leading features were Strand—an official government presentation of "Four Years For Freedom"; Rivoli—an official government presentation of "Britain's Far-Flung Battle Line," both watched with intense interest and frequently applied notes. It is only its impossibly要做到，甚至未能轻易分享大小原因的友情，和，最有可能的话，它不需做得和这情况。这些大的来源的喜悦的同一对，还有多于可能的，或者在任何照片里，不顾照片的男子，先生们相当特为研究摄影，或者可以做得在自己的研究，他们有爱好者和他们他们都是在重要的规则在。SPRINGTIME LA CARTA; an O. Henry story, and the art of entertainment which has been made by the Rivoli; and the overture "Sounds From England" and Goldwyn's "Friend Husband," at the Strand, are in evidence. These and the vocal solos contributed largely to the variety and charm of artistic presentation. These magnificent special days show that we are not losing our way in presentation. We are not groping around with night closing in upon us. We are progressing steadily toward wider audience and more satisfying results in this form of entertainment. Live managers are glimpsing new and more glorious performances from afar, not struggling in vain, but getting nearer and nearer ideal conditions.

Advertisers See "Italy's Flaming Front.

Following the luncheon and meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Service Association at the Fairmont Hotel, the members adjourned to Miles' Projection Room to witness the screening of "Italy's Flaming Front." Private Joseph P. Reddy, formerly motion picture editor of the Morning Telegraph, and now of the provisional ordinance detachment, located at Camp Raritan, Metuchen, N. J., was also present at the luncheon and screening, and was so impressed with the spectacular features of "Italy's Flaming Front," that he secured the permission of the The National Exhibitors' Circuit to show one of the three- reel episodes at an entertainment given by the members of his detachment on Friday evening, August 2, at New Brunswick.
"Triple Trouble" Genuine Says Spoor
Manufacturer Denies Essanay-Chaplin Film Is Either a Rehash or a Reissue but Is a New Film.
By George K. Spoor, President Essanay Company.

FOR the protection of exhibitors planning to run the forthcoming "Triple Trouble," which Chaplin and Essanay have just released, I have had to state that Chaplin never made a picture entitled "Triple Trouble," and that the film is not a reissue, nor is it a rehash, but that it is a new and different picture, without any connection with any other film.

It is true that Chaplin did not make a film for us, labeled with the title, "Triple Trouble," but we did make this film, after Chaplin and Essanay had it shown on the screen before. The facts are that at the time of making the picture it went under the working title of "Life." Essanay is in the habit of reviewing its titles just as very short time prior to the release, and at that time the title was changed when we believe we have a stronger one, as well as are scenes in the picture itself.

This was the case in "Triple Trouble," by Essanay considering it a better and more suitable title for the picture than "Life," which in fact was merely a tentative title.

No change was made after release.

Essanay has many Chaplin films and it has never attempted to change any title after releasing the picture under another name. Chaplin, Essanay, and Fox however, in this special case have a Chaplin picture, and has always stated that they were reissues, and all these reissues were released under the same title as originally.

It has also put out two Chaplin reviews, which it plainly stated in its announcement as a part of the Chaplin films, and as a result of the Chaplin pictures and, has always stated that they were reissues, and all these reissues were released under the same title as originally.

In "Triple Trouble," however, Essanay is presenting an entirely new film as it has stated. It is a continuous story made with Charlie Chaplin, and held by Essanay until the picture was made, and is not a rehash, nor a reissue of any pictures previously issued. This film now is in all the George Kleine releasing offices and exhibitors are invited to look at it. It takes that exhibitors are familiar with Chaplin films and it is very easy for them to judge for themselves.

Theatre Men to Aid Mitchell Memorial Stage and Screen Committee Raises $3,600 Toward Monument to Honor Late Mayor.

EVERY member of the theatrical and motion picture industry in New York will have an opportunity of contributing to a John Purroy Mitchel memorial fund as a result of a meeting held in the office of E. F. Alboc, when Marcus Loew was made chairman of a committee to form the Theatrical and Motion Picture Division. Thirty-six hundred dollars was raised among the men who attended the initial meeting.

Exhaustive plans are being laid by Mr. Loew to obtain subscriptions, large and small, from every one connected with the motion picture and theatre in New York in every capacity. All the film studios will be canvassed, as well as every theatre, in order to obtain the subscriptions.

The late mayor of New York, who died so nobly and dramatically in the service of his country, at various times displayed a friendship for and an interest in theatres and motion pictures, which was of vast benefit to everyone concerned in these industries. It is therefore entirely fitting that the joint industries should do something to properly perpetuate his memory for future generations.

CIFRE IS NOW SUPPLY COMPANY CHIEF.

Joseph S. CIFRE is now in charge of the main office of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, 197-205 Pleasant street, Boston, distributors for Simplex machines in Connecticut and Rhode Island, taking the place of William C. Francke, who recently resigned.

Mr. CIFRE, who is known to the majority of New England exhibitors as "Little Joe," has an unusually wide acquaintance among the managers of motion picture theatres in New England. His extensive personal knowledge of theatres in that locality is the result of numerous tours he has made as chief operator of the more important features sent out as road attractions.

In addition to his knowledge of operating he is a practical electrician, having at one time owned a prosperous electrical business at Revere Beach, Mass. He is president of Local No. 182, which is the largest in New England, having 150 active members. Mr. CIFRE is now serving his second term as president of that organization.

Diaz Now With Fox's Export Office.

Circulation Manager of Cine-Mundial Takes Post of Latin-American Department Manager.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the departure for Cuba and Central America of Abraham Carlos, general manager of the export interests of the Fox Film Corporation, and the departure of Aquileo Calvo for the management of the Fox exchanges in the Antilles, Mexico, Central America, are the appointment of Nicholas Diaz joined the Fox Film organization August 5 as manager of the Spanish and Portuguese department of the export section of the company.

The new post occupied by Mr. Diaz gives convincing illustration of the thorough comprehension of the export film Fox company enjoys. It marks a new and important addition to the ranks of American film manufacturers.

The acquisition of Mr. Diaz is evidence of even a more thorough policy for Fox export from now on. The institution of one man to take charge of one division of the export market is a departure in film circles; for the Fox organization is covering the various markets that use commercial solutions with similar thoroughness. Looking at it from another point of view, it more reveals the importance of the Spanish and Portuguese speaking markets for film manufacturers.

That Mr. Diaz should have been the selection for the management of this branch of the department is thoroughly patent to all who know the ability and aggressiveness of this young man. He leaves the circulation management of Cine-Mundial to assume his new post. During his three years with this Spanish and Portuguese export edition of the Moving Picture World Mr. Diaz contributed his share toward the unqualified success that Cine-Mundial has enjoyed.

The new Fox department head is a native of Bogota, Colombia. He came to this country some four years ago, and has since specialized in motion pictures.

Industry Girls Up for Loan Campaign.

Chairman Zukor Receiving Many Promises From League Officials and Notable Screen Stars.

VIDENCE that the motion picture industry is marshalling its forces with rapidity and enthusiasm with the single and united purpose of doing its full share in putting the Fourth Liberty Loan over the top sometimes to multiply in the daily correspondence received by Adolph Zukor, chairman of the National Association's committee appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department in furthering the publicity campaign of this section of the association.

Quite the most satisfying and significant feature of last week's developments was a telegram received by Mr. Zukor from Peter J. Schaefer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Schaefer wired from Chicago, pledging the complete cooperation of the league and stating that the members could be depended upon to forget all minor differences and work as one great machine at the command of Chairman Zukor should he call upon them.

Supplementing Mr. Zukor's telegram came a letter from Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, placing his services and those of his organization at the disposal of the speaking committee.

Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity for the Fourth Liberty Loan, has advised Chairman Zukor that he has received letters from numerous stars accepting the privilege of giving their services in the making of pictures. Among them Mr. Wilson mentioned Charles Ray, Mme. Alla Nazimova, Elsie Ferguson and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.
Robbins Is Factor in Fox Exchanges
Assistant General Managers of Corporation Is Responsible for Sales Development Program.

ONE of the important factors in the activities of the Fox Film Corporation during the season of 1918-19 will be Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the corporation. Mr. Robbins is in general charge of all the Fox exchanges in the United States, and upon him will largely fall the sales development program of the corporation in the coming year.

In the Fox home office Mr. Robbins has supervision over the contract, booking and development departments and repairs and supplies.

Mr. Robbins, in the formulation of the Fox policy for the coming year, has been a source of immeasurable help through his suggestions and counsel.

During his connection with the Fox Film Corporation he has shown a thorough grasp of all the many intricate questions which arise in the distribution of the immense amount of film which the Fox corporation issues. Shrewd, resourceful, and the possessor of a keen executive mind, he has been a powerful proof of William Fox's policy of choosing only men of big affairs as executives.

In having general supervision over the Fox exchanges throughout the United States Mr. Robbins has made a host of friends in the trade. Moreover, many of the splendid service aids now in force in Fox exchanges are the direct result of his insight into the needs and desires of exhibitors and his unremitted efforts to push the Fox organization to the front. Service is one of Mr. Robbins' pet hobbies; in fact, he fully believes service ranks almost as high in selling film as the worth of the film itself. He sees to it that Fox exchanges follow this policy.

Rochester Firm to Work No Miracles
Powers Film Products Company Is Now in Operation "In a Quiet, Steady Manner."

ONE of the newest ventures in the motion picture industry, the Powers Film Products Company, organized about two months ago, is in operation. Incorporating the buildings formerly housing the Fireproof Film Company at Ridgeway avenue and Marigold street, but so far as could be learned by diligent inquiry at the offices of the company, no attempt is to be made by the firm to do any of the wonderful things it was said to have in view when the corporation was organized.

At the time of the transaction in which the Powers-Cameron Company took over the lease of the plant of the defunct Fireproof Film Company remarkable stories were adroitly spread about the plans of the company, which were expected to "revolutionize" the motion picture industry. Miracles were to be performed, among them the producing of a film that would record the voice as well as the actions of the performers. This film was termed a "stereoscopic-talking picture."

When all the information concerning the new company came from is a mystery, for according to officials of the company the wonderful plans did not originate with the Powers Film Products Company, nor would they hazard a guess as to who had so industriously spread the story of their prospective miracles.

"Wild stuff," commented one official. "We are going to do nothing unusual. We are manufacturing no film except such as has been on the market for years. Other firms, including the one that occupied this plant before us, tried to do the unusual and failed. We are going into the business in a quiet, steady manner and will not try to rush things. The market for motion picture film is unlimited and we could easily get any number of large orders."

"When we first moved into this building it was said that everything was in it, but we are only beginning to get down to our work. The fact is that we expected to find only the four walls of the building, and we have thus far been finding things up and only started shipping recently. We employ at present only a few people, but of course that number will increase as we get things started."

It was hinted that the new firm was to be the manufacturing end of the Universal Film Company, but it was said that it had no special connection with any other companies. Patrick A. Powers is said to be ready to back the concern with a large share of his wealth.

Dolores Cassinelli Is Back on Screen

DOLores CASSINELLI is one of those piquant Italian beauties endowed with an interesting screen personality prominent in every picture in which she appears. After having left the silent drama for two years to take up concert work and to further develop her excellent soprano voice, Miss Cassinelli returned to the screen in the role of the princess in "The Million Dollar Dollies," and is about to be seen in "Lafayette, We Come!" in which she is co-starred with E. K. Lincoln.

Born in Genoa, Italy, July 4, 1894, she early developed an ambition to become a great dramatic or operatic star. First applying herself to her studies and equipping herself with a musical as well as literary education, she then first attracted attention through her appearance in some of the more famous Essanay productions of bygone days. By the time she had completed a three year contract with Essanay, she had been the leading player in such popular films as "When Soul Meets Soul," "Do Dreams Come True?" "A Girl and a Man," "The Greek Singer," and many others, and appearing with such favorites as Bryant Washburn, Captain E. H. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse, Frances O'Connor, Bushman, and others.

Miss Cassinelli is an expert linguist, speaking Italian, her native tongue and her favorite language, very fluently, while her knowledge of French, Spanish and English is enough to make any one marvel. She loves everything that is beautiful and artistic, but music has the first call in her affections, for like all of her race she is passionately fond of music.

Her return to the screen has been welcomed by fans the world over who still bear her allegiance, and it is an assured fact that Miss Cassinelli will more than make good.

LEAVING FILMS FOR UNITED STATES SERVICE.

Richard R. Neill and Rollo Lloyd, two players appearing in support of Harold Lockwood in Metro's screen production of "Pals First," a screen version of the stage success, "Pals!" written by Louis H. von Damm from Francis Perry Elliott's novel, will be lost to the films shortly after the conclusion of their work in this picture.

Mr. Neill announces that he is going to an officers' training camp on September 15, while all arrangements have been made for Mr. Lloyd to go to Camp Zachary Taylor, at Louisville, Ky., as soon as his engagement is over. There he will take charge of the arrangements for the entertainment of the men at the post. The rank of first lieutenant goes with Mr. Lloyd's position.
Facts and Comments

SUFFICIENT warning has been given American manufacturers of the great trade war which will follow inevitably the clash of arms that is now convulsing the world. Public prints of every description are pointing out continually the necessity of preparation for that battle. It will be America’s opportunity, and no small portion of that opportunity will fall to the make’s of motion pictures who have, in this country, developed their art to the highest state of efficiency. Information has come to us from unquestioned sources of the efforts now being made by German capital to control various lines of industry, especially the motion picture business, when peace shall have been secured. Already in such neutral countries which tolerate German trade, or with which Germans have communication, the fight for control is in progress. That such plans should succeed is intolerable, but it will be the particular province of motion picture men of America to accomplish their defeat. The question is “How?”

As the production of motion pictures now stands, America is making ninety per cent. of the world’s output. Everywhere American pictures are in demand; they are in fact preferred to those of any other source of production. Export conditions, consequent to the necessities of war, are making the distribution of our product somewhat difficult, but with the rapidly increasing tonnage of carrying ships this condition will, last always, so that there is every inducement for the starting of the strongest kind of propaganda in behalf of foreign trade; every reason why there should be a redoubling of every present effort to popularize our products among foreign peoples.

WHAT plans are you making in your state, Mr. Theatre Owner, to meet adverse legislation? Strong movements are under way to enforce Sunday closing laws and to impose censorship upon pictures. These are questions that must be handled locally. It will be up to the state organizations of theatre owners to fight these movements out with the legislators of such states where proposals to place such laws upon the statute books are made. Now is the time to begin the fight; don’t wait until bills are introduced; begin with the elections and put men in office who have sufficient breadth of vision to consider the great mass of the people instead of the few sectarian. Begin in your own towns by getting together and finding out where your lawmakers stand. Organize your forces and be ready for the fight when it comes.

A GREAT deal of piffle has been printed in trade papers about service to the exhibitor, meaning advice as to how to place his business before his patrons in the way that will spell profit in the largest letters. Concrete examples have been cited and “exhibitor helps” have been published, but all such are limited in their application and many of them do not apply. The Moving Picture World has for several years printed in its department “Advertising for Exhibitors” what might be truly termed a correspondence school of theatre advertising, calculated to train any man of intelligence in the best methods of promoting theatre patronage, regardless of the size of the house or of the town in which it is located. Careful study of the principles laid down in that department, which are always amply illustrated by concrete examples, will teach any budding publicity man or busy manager how to handle his program and his house, under any and all conditions. Try it.

A CONSIDERABLE falling off in the number of pictures produced by American makers is noted by the National Board of Review. It is about twenty-five per cent., calculated upon last year’s production. Off hand it would be difficult to say what the cause for shrinkage in product is beyond that cause which is apparent—the curtailment of the foreign market because of war. But while the number of subjects as reviewed by the board are less there may still be an increase in number of prints through reissues of old subjects which would not come under the scrutiny of the board. Intimation that Government tax measures is to blame for the falling off is hardly right. Our opinion would be that the difficulty of getting new stories would come nearer the truth. Of course there is the falling off of independent production usually marketed on the state right plan which is due to still another cause. Altogether the shrinkage does not indicate a serious condition of the trade.

Comedies of Married Life
By Louis Reeves Harrison.

GOING back to the time Griffith was putting on one-reel skits for the Biograph Company, when "Biograph Day" meant a packed house for the exhibitor, irrespective of stars and big names to lure the unvarying, many of us can recall with pleasure screen glimpses of a relation now seldom used, that of modern husband and wife, in its tragi-comic and infinite variety. Some of these were De Maupassant gems.

"Marriage is not an institute of nature," said Napoleon.

He meant marriage as arranged by man.

Griffith was not depicting tragic matrimonial disasters, but sources of misunderstanding and scenes of reconciliation and readjustment. Among them were few of the stock situations, such as the triangle arising from a husband's neglect, or preoccupation with work, and few were melodramatic from past sins rising up to obstruct future happiness—they were mostly domestic comedies, and they took.

The subject is more alive now than it was then.

We may wish to preserve the ideal of sacredness set up by the church, or the pledge of security it furnishes society, but the machinery is old and the wheels have been creaking loudly for some time. Something has gone wrong with the works. Motion picture need not point out the remedy, but they can present the amusing facts for grown-up delight.

Romance leading to marriage creates an ideal existence.

For that reason it goes no further than the embrace of lovers.

We often wonder what is going to happen when these dear young creatures leave a steady diet of cake and get down to bread and butter, and we have our doubts, as Thackeray did, when he wrote a sequel to Scott's "Ivanhoe." Our attitude of conservatism toward the present form of marriage has long been undergoing a change, until there is now a mental attitude in audiences which is little short of open revolt against the restrictions and regulations of days gone by. Whether that revolt is justified or not, it has brought about a condition of receptivity which gives assurance of success to domestic comedies.

The stage has just given us brilliant illustration in "Why Marry."

This comedy, a daring one, resorts to no morbid emotional appeal, supposed to be essential for dramatic success—it is almost purely intellectual. It is of the kind supposed to be over people's heads, but it astonishes the wise and arouses the stupid. It boldly faces and deals with existing conditions—it is redundantly alive. In view of the supreme importance of marriage to society as constituted at this moment, the wonder is that these bright and interesting aspects have not been given long ago on both stage and screen.

Both mediums as now used are weak in the same spot.

They reflect life as it is supposed to be, not as it really is.

They omit that psychology of man and woman which is obvious to all men and women of full growth in an audience, yet which requires high art to picture in a story. In illustration is Balzac's description of a wife who is about to fall out of love with her husband.

"She will throw paving stones at your head to drive away the flies that light on it. She will tell you in the evening of the things that have been said about you, and will ask an explanation of acts which you never committed, and of words which you never said. She professes to have justified you for faults of which you are innocent. The deafening rattle which your wife shakes will follow you everywhere with its obtrusive din. Your darling will stun you, will torture you, meanwhile arming herself by making you feel only the thorns of married life. She will be dull when you are merry, and will make you detest her meriment when you are moody. Very few men have force of mind not to succumb to this preliminary comedy. Most of them become irritated and fall into irreparable mistakes."

She is after alimony.

Rich material for this sort of story lies less in the situation than in the traits of human character revealed. It furnishes a perpetual delight to the audience to see people of the screen story amusingly at odds in the great Comedic Humaine.

Globe-Trotting Films
By Robert C. McElravy.

I know not where His islands lift Their fronded palms in air.

ONE individual greatly disfranchised in these days of submarines and general restrictions in ocean travel is the inveterate globe-trotter, that ubiquitous gentleman who used to come back to us from foreign shores, with a plentiful supply of labels upon his suitcase and a fund of stories on his lips about his visits in foreign lands.

But the public is not entirely the loser in this matter, for the films have taken up travel topics where the globe-trotter left off. Through the medium of the screen millions of people are becoming more and more familiar with world geography. The travel film holds its own with the best forms of moving picture entertainment. It may be found in most wisely selected programs today.

The travel film has had a more or less scattered and disconnected exploitation until the last year or two. But certain producers, recognizing the strong interest of the public in these informing screen subjects, are now going about things in a better way. That recent study of South American countries and cities was a step in the right direction; the travelogues depicting our own West, and the Canadian series, have been well worth while. Innumerable others may be traced by carefully examining the educational department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD during the past few years. Films of this sort have a permanent value and may be used by the exhibitor at any time to advantage.

Just now a new series of travel pictures is being released. They were photographed under the personal supervision of Clyde E. Elliott, and the opening numbers are of particular interest to American audiences. One of them depicts the Island of St. Thomas, recently acquired by this country from Denmark, at a cost of $25,000,000. Others deal with the French and British islands in the West Indies, including Barbados, Trinidad and Martinique.

Such is the limited acquaintance of the average American with his own country, that these islands, which lie at the very gateway to the Panama Canal, seem like foreign shores to him. We know in a dim sort of way that they have a certain picturesque beauty, that they are inhabited by natives of sober, industrious habits, and that palm trees grow upon these isles. Persons who have read one of Mrs. Atherton’s brilliant novels, “The Conqueror,” will remember that Alexander Hamilton was born on one of the islands of the West Indies, and will no doubt recall her description of one of the violent hurricanes that occasionally sweep these isles. But of the West Indies and the whole region in and about the Caribbean Sea we are strangely uninformed.

While these island subjects only lead the new travel series, which we understand will cover many other parts of the world as well, it is particularly gratifying to have something of a definite nature on the West Indies at this time. The New York Times and perhaps other newspapers have been urging that our Government purchase more of these islands, if possible, the suggestion being made that an American Mediterranean might be established there.

If the screen can aid in such an undertaking, by giving the people a better acquaintance with the islands themselves, it will be another credit mark for the films. The best way to win the friendship and esteem of your neighbors is to pay some attention to them. In this connection we have a feeling that some day the screen is going to perform valuable service between this country and Mexico. Who knows as yet the full possibilities of the screen as a diplomatic medium?

Weak Spots in Construction

By EDWARD WEITZEL.

Three of the pictures shown recently, in one week, were classed as good examples of screen attractions. The accepted term “photo-play” is purposely not applied to them. One scenario was made from a successful stage play, another from a popular novel. The last scenario was also founded on a published story. All three pictures were finely acted and produced, the leading roles being filled by stars of acknowledged ability.

The first two pictures had weak spots in their construction. The screen version of the stage play, a polite farce, failed to follow the original and never depart from the comic spirit that should rule every moment of the story. A divorce incident, which is hurried over by a brief mention in the stage play is shown in full on the screen, and a serious note is struck that is out of harmony with the author’s intent.

In the first picture, taken from a popular novel, the error of construction consists in working up the main theme for the first half of the scenario and then turning off to a side track and carrying forward a motive that is not nearly so strong as the other, and slacking the dramatic tension.

The third picture frankly follows the novel form. The principal character is supposed to be relating his adventures, and all the subtitles are put in the first person, past tense.

Screen technic will one day recognize that the photo-play and the photo-novel are separate and distinct forms of telling a story; and that the screen drama is a more arbitrary but much more effective manner of swaying the emotions.

Contrary to the accepted theory, the popular verdict on a picture is not the one that should always influence the author or the man who produces his story. Many a spectator leaves a theater with the conviction that he has been well entertained. The popular verdict on the picture he has just seen would read, “very good.” Ex-
Grinds the Crank on Chaplin's Antics
Roland Totheroh Responsible for the Fine Camera Work of the Million-Dollar Comedies.

THE millions of Charlie Chaplin film fans all over the world, when they sit back in the luxurious opera chairs of the picture theatres, are enjoying the antics of the great entertainer, seldom, if ever, giving a thought to any one but the inimitable Charlie.

There is, however, one other man deserving of consideration, and he is the man behind the camera, who, steadily, day by day, month by month and, in the case of Chaplin, year by year, grinds out the laughs that go round the world. Ten years ago a young man sat at a drawing board in the art department of a San Francisco newspaper. He was a cartoonist, and had made caricatures and "strips" that had made many persons laugh. But he wanted a wider scope than the columns of a city newspaper, so he threw away the India ink and the artist's brush and proceeded to learn all he could learn about a motion picture camera. That cartoonist was Roland Totheroh, today Charlie Chaplin's cameraman, a position he has held steadily since 1915, when the comedian started his contract with Mutual.

Flashing back to 1910, Mr. Totheroh, or "Roily," as he is familiarly known throughout the industry, applied to G. M. Anderson and was given a position in the camera department of the Essanay West Coast studios at Niles, California, where he had soon mastered the intricacies of every camera made.

When the Essanay West Coast studio closed Charlie Chaplin went east, and "Roily," as he says, played a hunch, came to Los Angeles, and as soon as Charlie Chaplin returned with the Mutual contract in his pocket "Roily" asked for the job of cameraman—and got it.

Comedy photography requires greater skill than that of ordinary drama, for in drama poor photography can always be tinted, which covers a multitude of sins; but a comedy must be "there"—clean-cut, sharp; in other words, not fair, pretty good, but it has got to be right, and that is the kind "Roily" makes.

General to Release Red Cross Film
It Will Show Parade of American Veterans in Paris on the Fourth of July.

THE first laurel-crowned United States fighters are shown in a film just brought to this country by the American Red Cross. This picture presents a review of American veterans fresh from their triumphs north of the Meuse. After its premiere in New York at the Rivoli theatre the film will be distributed throughout the United States for the American Red Cross by General Film Company. The production is the work of the pictures division of the American Red Cross.

The principal scenes depicted in the Red Cross film are from the international Fourth of July celebration in Paris, in which battle-scarred United States troops parade in the dedication of the new Avenue du President Wilson, formerly the Avenue du Trocadero, to the Strassburg monument in the place de la Concorde, where impressive patriotic ceremonies took place.

These troops had participated in America's first powerful blow against the German enemy north of Chateau Thierry, when a sensational advance was made against the enemy's forces. How the women of Paris flung bouquets at the feet of the tall, wiry marching men is shown, besides many other incidents of the day.

The Red Cross film has been edited and titled by S. L. Rothapfel and his staff. Acting as distributors for the American Red Cross General Film Company will be at once place copies of the picture in every city of the United States.

Lieutenant Cromelin Is Heard From
Son of Paul H. Cromelin of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation Tells of Fighting the Boche—Now in Hospital.

IN a letter to his mother, Lieutenant John A. Cromelin of the Twelfth Field Artillery and son of Paul H. Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation of New York, gives an account of the fighting on June 11, at which time he was wounded five times by machine gun fire. Though the young man wrote that he was not badly hurt, his wounds put him in the hospital at Vichy, from which point his letter was written on July 15. The letter reads in part as follows:

"I had been detailed as artillery liaison officer to the marines," he says. "On the night of June 11, while the attack was in progress, I was in company with a corporal, when we stepped into a trench, and the corporal was killed. I then tried to sneak out behind our advancing line. They opened fire at ten feet. The corporal was not hit, but three bullets got me in one arm, side by side, and two others went through my right leg. The corporal helped me and we ran about a quarter of a mile, dropping down about every fifty feet when a flare would go up. It was a very dark night, and that prevented the German gun crew from following our company." "The corporal helped to dress my wounds when we thought we had got safely away from the machine gun, and then we went on to a dressing station. Three days passed there before we were able to go on."

Enclosed with the letter were some notes made hastily during the busy days of the attack. Lieutenant Cromelin told of meeting a French flying officer who had been shot down three times in three days without injury to himself and little damage to his machine.

"The Americans showed the Boches that they were a darned sight better bunch of fighting men," he said. "I take off my hat to the doughboy, especially to the marine doughboy.

While regretting his son's injuries and hoping that they were no more serious than the boy reported, Mr. Cromelin is justly proud of his work. "I doubt if there are many officers to the side of the one who has been my son, the West Point training who are better equipped for service than my boy," said Mr. Cromelin. "In the first place he had three years in the officers training corps of the University of Virginia, up to 1914, while he was attending school there. He was in England when the war started and wanted to get in then, but I prevailed upon him to return to the United States, when he continued his education at Princeton. He attended three camps of instruction at Lehigh and received a second lieutenant's commission in the regular army. Again I prevailed upon him to return to Princeton and finish his education, which he did, resigning from the army. When the United States went to war he tried to revive his commission, but was unable to do so and joined the officers' training camp at Fort Meyer, Va., from which he was assigned to the Twelfth Artillery, regular, which national advance was made against the enemy. His class in the University of London which went into the war at the beginning has been practically wiped out."

Lieutenant Cromelin is but twenty-two years of age, but is six foot two inches tall and built in proportion.

"The White Wilderness" (Mutual-Outing-Chesett).

Following in the footsteps of previous numbers of the Outing-Chesett series "The White Wilderness" is excellent in quality of photography and subject matter. As the title suggests, the picture abounds in snow scenes, and opens up a party making its way through the snow-clad forest to the foot of Mount Washington. The ascent of the mountain presents scenes of interest, which while not particularly thrilling, possess the quality found within the course of snowshoeing; the dog, the skier, the icy slopes. The particular feature of the picture covers the sports in which the party indulge after they arrive at the Tip Top house, including an amusing snowshoe run to Lake Placid, where cutting is indulged in, and also skiing, skating, sledding and tobogganing. The real thrill of the reel occurs when we take a ride down a toboggan slide with the camera man.

"The Bay of Biscay" (Beacon).

The Bay of Biscay, which is partially bounded by France and Spain, presents many scenes of beauty along its shores. The Bidasso river, separating France from Spain, is shown, and also Pheasant Island, on which the boundary line splits and where the Treaty of the Pyrenees was signed. Fuerteventura, San Sebastian, the Chateau Polignac, the home of Pierre Loti, St. Jean de Luz, Biarritz, the rock of the Virgin, and beautiful surf scenes along the shores of the bay, are among the most interesting sights. The picture was exhibited at the Rialto theatre, New York City.

"Venezuela" (Pathé-Post Film).

An exceptionally entertaining travel number, showing the picturesque life of the natives of Venezuela, S. A. The manner of life is very unusual, owing to the oddity of customs, homes and surroundings. The making of pottery, close-ups of native women and children, and goat raising are special features.

"Official War Review No. 6" (Pathé).

The closing feature of this number is one of the best. It pictures an Allied attack on the West Front. The men are seen going over the top, with tanks also in action; later the dead, wounded and prisoners are shown. Other features of this number include views of the British fleet, the Prince of Wales in Italy and American soldiers in France.

"Our Dumb Friends in the War" (French Pictorial Service).

This series of views exhibited at the Strand theatre during the week of July 21 introduces in an entertaining and informational manner the various kinds of animals that are being used in the war. These include the horse, which is shown, and training: the dog, the camel, the mule and the burro. Cattle and sheep being shipped to the Allies are also shown.

"From Jelly to Bullfrog" (Universal).

In the 83d release of the Screen Magazine is an interesting treatise on the development of the bullfrog. The pictures were taken at the New York Zoological Park. After showing the jelly-like substance containing the eggs of the frog, the hatching of the eggs is shown, then the development from polypog to full-fledged tadpole. Finally the transformation into bullfrog—the process of months reduced to seconds by the camera.

"Railroad Ties from Uncle Sam's Forests" (Universal).

The felling of trees in the national forests and their conversion into railroad ties is shown in the 83d release of the Screen Magazine. The scenes of the picture were taken in the Wasatch National Forest, Utah. The trees that we see being cut are Lodgepole pine. The scoring of the log for the flat face of the tie, the stripping of the bark, the sawing of the ties and lowering of them to the dry beds of a stream to wait for the spring freshets to float them to the shipping point is shown.

"When Is a Weed Not a Weed" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 132d release of the Pictograph will be found an interesting series of illustrations of weeds having nutritive values. It teaches the spectator that nature has provided us with food of a palatable sort without the aid of garden tools and artificial cultivation. It points out the fact that potatoes and tomatoes were at one time classified as weeds, and that the leaf of the dandelion after it has passed the salad stage can be cooked and eaten after the fashion of spinach.

Life and Habits of the Humming Bird

We are indebted for one of the most remarkable and interesting of bird studies to W. L. Finley of the Finley Enterprises Corporation who photographed it, and to the Bray Studios, Inc., who present it in the 132d release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. This study takes us into the confidence of the daintiest creature, the humming bird.

Because of its unusually rapid flight and its secretive habits and shyness, the humming bird is extremely hard to get; and Mr. Finley spent many days of patient waiting and resorted to many ingenious tricks to secure the pictures. As a result he was enabled to obtain a complete record on film of the life and habits of this tiny bird, probably the first record of the kind ever obtained.

After discovering a nest, the photographer set up his camera and each day stood by waiting for developments. Shortly he discovered that two pearly eggs the size of small beans had been laid and that the male immediately flew off that his gorgeous coloring might not attract enemies to the nest.

A few days later two tiny babies appeared, which the mother guarded with the greatest care, only leaving the nest to obtain food for them. The food she swallowed and the twins drew it already digested from her bill. After nineteen days the first of the babies was ready for a trial flight and off it went to be followed in another day by its little sister and then the mate once more appeared to occupy the tiny home with his little wife until another year and another family had come and gone.

"The Finger of Justice" Is Approved

Washington's Superintendent of Office Comments Strongly in Favor of Anti-Vice Picture—Seattle Echoes Sentiment.

On July 21 "The Finger of Justice," Rev. Paul Smith's production, founded on the anti-vice campaign of San Francisco, opened at Poli's theatre, Washington, D. C., after having been reviewed by Major Raymond Pullman, superintendent of police, and president of the National Police Chiefs' Association, and others, among whom were public officials and individuals of national reputation. Major Pullman's comment after having seen the picture was as follows: "I cannot understand why anyone would oppose this picture unless he has an interest in commercialized vice. Everyone in Washington ought to see it. While this is not an all-claptrap picture, it does suggest that such departments would result in a return of the vicious conditions of the old days of the 'Division.' Literary Antiquities Recorded in Film Paramount-Bray Pictograph Presents Historical Records of Ancient Civilization.

LOCKED behind fireproof doors in the New York Public Library is a collection of priceless literary antiques which is the envy of every great museum in the world. In connection with the 133rd release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

The ruins of great cities, long centuries ago the dwelling place of peoples whose history is almost unknown, have been unearthed and from them have been taken the written records from which science has been able to learn of the life and peoples who lived long before the dawn of history. Among ancient clay tablets on which scribes 4,000 years ago had written of his king has been brought to the newest of the world's countries; a copy of the historic Chaldean tablet telling of the Flood and discovers amazing evidence connecting the Egyptians and other priceless record. A copy of the Koran, the bible of the Mohammedans, hand-lettered on vellum and dating back to the tenth century, lies next to the historic Pentateuch containing the books of Exodus and Leviticus and actually used by the last colony of Jews at Kafing Fu, in the fifteenth century.

Hodkinson Recruits Seasoned Salesmen

Corporation Organizes Field Forces for Exploitation of Parahta, Plaza and Douglass Natural Color Pictures.

THO W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is putting into effect its new field policy of organization. The Parahta, Plaza and Douglass Natural Color pictures now forming a part of Hodkinson Service will be represented by their own salesmen operating through the exchanges of the General Film Corporation. During the past Summer, Mr. Hodkinson has been recruiting, through the medium of trade press advertising, seasoned film men who know the faults of the industry and are in sympathy with the Hodkinson plan of service, and the selection of men has been extremely fortunate.

Each exchange will be represented by a Hodkinson salesman. The entire United States has been divided, for the present, into three sections, the salesmen representatives in each section being under the supervision of a division manager. John A. Stevenson will control the southern division and P. N. Brinch the western. C. E. Shurtleff, though continuing his duties as general sales manager, will cover the eastern territory.

P. N. Brinch, who left New York last week, will install picked salesmen representatives in the west, his division covering all the territory west of Omaha and Minneapolis. Mr. Brinch's field experience covers a period of ten years. After three years with Pat Loney in Chicago he joined Mr. Hodkinson with the General Film Company and later with Triangle, where he was made a reputation as special representative. When Mr. Hodkinson incorporated his own company Mr. Brinch joined him as sales manager.

John A. Stevenson, whose division takes in the territories reached by the Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Cincinnati, Kansas City and St. Louis branch offices, was general sales manager for Paramount, leaving that concern when Mr. Hodkinson withdrew as president. He has been special representative for the Hodkinson Corporation since its inception.

C. E. Shurtleff will make a short tour of the east to get the salesmen representatives installed, returning to the home office to continue his duties as general sales manager. W. A. Bach will retain his capacity as assistant general sales manager.

The first of the salesmen representatives to take up his duties of giving personal service to Hodkinson customers is Arthur S. Abeles, who will handle the territory covered by the New York branch office. Mr. Abeles has previously been associated with Pathe for four years, acting first as New York branch manager and later as special representative.

Other Hodkinson representatives have been appointed as follows: W. W. Peck, who when employed in the Pathe organization, was a valuable salesman for three years and later manager of the Pathe Detroit office. Joe Levey, in charge of the Omaha office, after long experience with Fox and Select, went into the state right business for himself. Hoyt G. Morrow, who will have charge of the Dallas territory, has served many years in a managerial capacity for both theatres and exchanges, his latest associations being Dallas manager for Artists and Players, and Exhibitors.

William S. Hart Invites Suggestions

As Producer Rather Than Player He Asks Exhibitors to Write Him Constructive Criticism.

STEEPING out of his personality as the foremost delineator of Western characters who has ever come to the drama, silent or spoken, William S. Hart, in an interview at his studio in Hollywood, Cal., addressed the exhibitors, the executives of the producing organization which is making pictures of himself, and placed the policy of his company before the theatre managers. The purpose of Mr. Hart's interview was to urge the exhibitors to make motion pictures reach a destination beyond that attained by any other factor in the progress of the industry. Before presenting his views Mr. Hart emphasized the fact that he was talking as a producer, not as a player. "I hesitate in addressing the exhibitors," said Mr. Hart, "for the reason that my motives may be misunderstood. Because of the public prominence of my career as an actor it is difficult for anyone, even an exhibitor, to consider me in any other capacity. When I speak from my desk I speak as a producer; I speak with the interests of our productions and the advancement of the industry in mind, but I speak with some hesitation because it may be thought that I am endeavoring to arouse the interest of the exhibitors in William S. Hart in person and to aid him individually, rather than to obtain their co-operation in making Hart pictures valuable. In truth, it is more important to make pictures that can make money and making them through our pictures, because they present quality production. I urge the exhibitors who read this, therefore, to appreciate the fact that it is the producer of Hart pictures, an executive of the William S. Hart Productions, Inc., who is addressing them and not a self-interested star."

"When a year ago I was able to form the William S. Hart Productions, Inc., with a contract for eight pictures a year, I endeavored, to be released on the market as soon as possible, and the arrangement was drawn up so that I was an executive in my own company. This was not done for me to be a figurehead with my name on the stationery merely for advertising purposes or a contract that I might have charge of my own productions. And, after the completion of my first year under this arrangement, the success which I have met has compensated me for all the years of struggle and gain. I have the pleasure and the hardships that I suffered forming my career. I have gradually developed the various departments of my studio so that I control them all in the manner in which they can be of service to the public, and the man who depends upon my productions for his living."

"I make each of these statements with a direct motive. That motive is to let the exhibitor know that, as a producer, I am entitled to the same consideration as any other individual who has put his energies into the making of a picture. If suggestions, reprovals, and co-operation of any kind. I want the theatre man to know that by communicating with me he can reach the producer, the manager, the director and the star with one word—and that word will be welcome."

LOUISE GLAUM IN SEVEN LOEW HOUSES.

Ruff Stuff.

EVIDENTLY Ralph Ruffner can hustle in any old town. Lately he moved down to the Rialto, Butte, Montana, to take charge of that house and his first attraction of importance was "My Four Years in Germany." It is interesting to note Ruff's listing of the display he used:

200 window cards
6 choice locations for neatly framed 22x28s.
3,000 small heralds.
15,000 large heralds.
25 twenty-four-sheet stands.

Special decoration for the building.
Slides.
Campaigns in two newspapers.
Letter from the mayor.

The large heralds were those supplied by the company. The campaign is best told in his own words: He writes:

The amount of traffic hereabouts brought tears of gratification to my eyes. And it was responsible for about 35 per cent. of the inspiration to put up some go-getting stuff as advance on "My Four Years in Germany." Four days ahead of the show we opened on the building from the lower line in the photo, "Ambassador Gerard's My Four Years in Germany Sunday." Then the day of the show we stepped out with the top line in red, "To Hell with the Kaiser, see," etc. This with the large cut-out letters in blue, formed "a hundred feet long. The total cost of this ad was around $75. We used heavy advance in all the papers, put out 15,000 heralds with the aid of the Boy Scouts, with the same result as in all other parts of the United States—terrible business. I am told it was the best-advertised picture attraction Butte has had. The heralds alone and their distribution cost $15. Not a solitary line of endeavor was overlooked in creating a rabid desire to see the picture. Naturally, it is an attraction that lends itself to aggressive work, and though we might have done just as great a business with less expenditure, still, this is hot weather time and our experience was worth much to us in pointing out the necessity of taking no chances. And we didn't. There are many side attractions open at this season to lure the potential patron away from Indoors, and if the picture-show man relaxes for one little day his efforts to market his wares, he'll find that relaxation costs a great deal more than a big photography production. One thing we did that was different from the procedure on the Coast in handling this particular show was that we relied greatly on our advance copy only opening on Sunday with four full, instead of the customary page. The four full I mention carried the most copy I have ever put into an ad. Probably somebody read it all. I did—it was like a strange child—he didn't look familiar. There was a good opportunity to have a little fun at Butte's expense and gain a laugh from the town people at an important point in the story of "My Four Years," and this we did. You will recall the scene where the Kaiser and his staff are seated at a large table and Zimmerman is telling what they are going to do with the United States after they take it, that they will give Texas to Mexico, California to Japan, and the balance they'll keep for themselves. Immediately following this comes the title, "Like crooks dividing so much loot," followed by a very clever fade-in showing each man at his place, though now dressed in the melodramatic attire of the underworld denizen. Here we introduced four feet of title which we had printed here, reading "—and we'll give BUTTE, MONTANA, back to the Indians." As a surprise it was complete! and it won a big hand and plenty of laughter at every performance. One hardly expects to hear the Kaiser and his staff tell what they are going to do with one's own town, does one? I have nothing but the best of compliments for the producers of "My Four Years in Germany," and the excellent east which interpreted it. The Butte people who saw it were enthusiastic in their praise. Upon my arrival here, when I found this production booked, my first thought was of the splendid line of advertising possibilities; of the wonderful black and white stills which would undoubtedly accompany it. Fine copy to work from—stuff the advertising department of the producers could not help but availing them.
About the only objection to be offered on this display of the Strand, Minneapolis, is that it is so unattractive that people will have to think twice before they realize that it is the advertisement for a picture.
maiden lady with a troubled mind. We like the individuality that the signed statement gives the advertiser, but it does not hook up with the title. We like the individual exchange manager, but we think that it is better to notch or mortise the cut to permit the major portion of the announcement to be used in a type. Ten paper will permit "distinctive" lettering, but it will detract from the description.

Steve, Too.

Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Elcorado, and the Orpheum, Harrisburg, Ill., is another who is not lost in admiration of the press matter supplied for "My Four Years in Germany," but his trouble differs from Ruffner's in that he finds that he can cut off. No cuts are supplied with this production, mats alone being offered, and the papers supplied with this production, mats alone being offered, and the papers

"MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY"

Two Cross Page, Four-Inch Spaces and One Five Inches Deep for "My Four Years in Germany," Showing What Can Be Done Without Cuts.

In Steve's town have no casting boxes because they do not stereotype. It never occurred to the exchange manager to have a new cuts cast for the use of the small town man who pays a (to him) high rental and who needs cuts in order to get the business. Steve says he has no real kick coming because he did $24 better than he did with "Over the Top," but that is not the idea. A picture with a high rental should carry cuts as well as does, or, at least, the exchanges should have these cast up. The cut shows the three cross-page advertisements. They are not striking as the "Over the Top" Campaign, but it is good work for all types. He also used the "I am a friend of the Kaiser's" philosophy, for the pictures to be supplied by the renters. He also took a two sites, warning friends of the Kaiser to stay away from the house and used Ruffner's "Try to get in" slogan.

Changed Again.

The Hill, Newark, has changed its program style again. Now the four-pagent has been replaced by a card strip about 4 by 6 inches, printed on one side with the program, and on the other with general stuff about pictures and the Hill pictures in particular. An eight point face is used for the lettering, and there is two feet instead of across the page, making it much easier to read. We think that this side works harder than the formal program, because it is chattering and readable, and makes publicity for the house. When Charles Mack still takes the public into his confidence with an editorial, but he still signs it "Your manager" instead of with his own name, which would have a still stronger effect. Give your house a personality, and in a community make that personality your own.

Uses a Duplicator.

The Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., seems to have gone over to the use of a duplicator machine for its program work, and sends out a form letter each week on the program of using a device that gives a clean, sharp impression, they get a good result, and we think that it will pull as much business as would a program. The program is run off on the company's letter heads, which is an expensive stock for advertising. We think it would give just as good an effect as an use a cutting and cheaper paper. Cuts can be curved for the machines having a cylinder and used just as they are. When no effort is made to give the announcement the appearance of a letter, we think that this would save the cost of printed letter heads with no loss in effect. By the way, if you have a duplicator, get one that works from type, and get the elite typewriter used instead of the regular pica. You can tell more to the page.

Jusso.

L. W. Barelay, of the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., pays his compliments to the page. Barelay makes the following two remarks:

I lay no claims to being an advertising expert, nor a competent critic. But after seven years in the newspaper, the chamber of commerce and press agent game, I must admit that I can die up eighteen-dollar-a-week newspaper men who could put out better stuff than these alleged advertising men are handing us. And the worst of it is that every nickel spent on these fellows' salaries and on the junk they band us increases our film rental without getting us a damned thing.

That's just the idea. The pressmen are supposed to be giving the exhibitor service. And because he is supposed to be giving service, his salary is added to the cost of the release, and the exhibitor is buying a dead horse that he does not care to use. And for an horrible example he remarks that the pressman who in his ready-made advertisement starts it off, "The Palace—The Harbor of Sweet Content," should be on some woman's magazine writing household hints. It's worse than that. Just to prove he knows something, Mr. Barclay reads in some of his own work. One of the advertisements is unusually good save for two points. The day is not dated and the hours of performance are not stated. Apart from that, this display is unusually good. The house, star and play get the big lines in their relative order.

Interesting Just Now.

The Empire, Montgomery, Ala., gets a half page in a Sunday issue of the newspapers for its ice-cooled, air-washed system of ventilation, and it makes good reading for the picture fans, but we think that it would have excited more comment had it been explained that this system is the same as that used for the houses of Congress in Washington, instead of announcing it as a new, and therefore presumably untried, device. It is our understanding that the system was devised by E. F. Albee when Keith's theater, Boston, was built, and the system of forcing the air under the seats through the seat standards and grills was later adopted for the Capitol building. But the main point is that along with the opening of the summer is the time to talk about your cooling and ventilating system.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive the first copy of the department ready to mail without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents, postpaid. Canadian stations are specially urged.

live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Settling the Mazda Question.

This department has asked for a conference with the governing officials of the Mazda lamp company to have the claims of that apparatus made in competition with those of other companies as is already known. This conference is now in process of being called, as is also known. Following is the letter I sent to S. B. Doane, Chief Engineer of the National Electric Lamp Works, and myself.

In the first place, as set forth in a recent editorial in the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, the claims of the various makers of Mazda Projection lamps are, to a considerable degree, conflicting, and it is to be hoped these claims can and will be harmonized at the meeting, or at least for certain apparatus and recommend these claims to their companies for adoption. Second, it is to be hoped that we may be able to fix upon some basis of what might be termed “maximum permissible claims” for Mazda Projection lamps, of 600 and 750 foot-candles that optical differentiation or variation, as such, may be expected in the arc lamp, since nine theatre men out of ten will ask, “How will the Mazda compare with the arc lamp?”

Personally, I incline to the view that arc lamp apparatus is the best servant we can employ in the latter comparison, but that is a matter for discussion when we meet. In any event, I am certain the meeting will more than justify its having been held.

Accompanying this letter was the following, designed to set forth, in as concise form as possible, the main points to be considered:

In seeking to replace an electric arc for projection work the first thing the average theatre owner wants to know is, “How will the new light compare with that I am now using?” If the salesman makes extravagant claims, which cannot be backed up, with actual performance, then there will be a sale made at the expense of a dissatisfied customer, also usually a customer who will seek to “get even” for the wrong done him by “knocking” the Mazda at every opportunity.

Another very serious danger we encounter in the endeavor to supplant a too-powerful arc (by “too-powerful” I mean too powerful to be properly supplanted by the Mazda) is the fact that modern photoplays require a very strong light in order to bring out the more delicate shadings in photography. If a light of too low value is used there will be loss of beauty. In other words, there will be possibilities in the film which will be lost because the light is not powerful enough to bring them out.

To fail to take cognizance of this phase of the matter is to do grave injustice to the business as a whole, as well as to the patrons of those theatres which are using a sufficiently powerful light to employ the entire photographic shading of the film for the screen. For this reason it is important that some standard of light requirement be set up, and this, it seems to me, can only be done by screen measurement, foot candle measurements. I would not definitely say it, but certainly it will be necessary to set the standard in total light strength at the film. (In thinking the matter over later, it has occurred to me that the latter proposal is impractical because of variation in screen surface and size.) It may even be that we cannot set up any standard of this kind at all. But from the standpoint of the industry and the theatre manager this latter is of great importance.

To sum up, there are, it seems to me, two main questions: (A) What maximum claim can be made, and substantiated, as between the arc and the Mazda for projection? (B) What light strength is really necessary in order to do justice to the film itself? The first is, of course, the BIG thing for the meeting to consider, that and the harmonizing of claims between the different manufacturers for what are essentially the same, identified goods.

Upon receipt of the foregoing, Chief Engineer Doane sent out a letter addressed to the proper officials of the three companies involved which reads in part as follows:

To Mr. Rogers (Assistant Gen., Mgr. Edison Lamp, Works) and the others.

I had a preliminary, entirely informal meeting with Mr. Richardson at luncheon at the Vanderbilt Hotel in N. Y. C., June 20th. It develops that the claims the salesmen make to the Motion picture theatres when they ask us to standardize, I asked Mr. Richardson to submit a second set of claims, and he sums it up as follows: (see my letter and accompanying summary to Mr. Doane).

The claims the salesmen have been making for years, in terms of the arc lamp which it displaces, and that when one salesman says the 20 amperes lamp will do this and thus, every other salesman should say the same thing. Mr. Gillett of the Motion Picture News has written, suggesting that Mr. Cory, his expert, could be of assistance to us. I have told him we shall be glad of any assistance which can be rendered us by any one.

All this is set forth to show you that this department is not asleep on the Mazda lamp proposition, but very much awake doing its best to look after your interests, which, in the end, are the true interests of the Mazda lamp manufacturers. If Mr. Cory can assist in reaching a satisfactory conclusion in this matter, his assistance will, of course, be well come. He had the same privilege of setting the matter in motion that I had, and the fact that I have set it in motion does not in the least debar anyone who has ideas of the Mazda lamp manufacturers.

I am very sure the coming meeting, which will probably be held in this month (July) will be productive of results of much and lasting value to all concerned.

Three Condenser System Experiment.

Our old friends, Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, sends in the following:

Getting two new Power’s 6-Bs, with new lamphouse; I am provided with an experiment lamphouse. Am using a three-lens condenser combination, which has increased my screen illumination by from 15 to 25 per cent. Using 25 amperes, I am getting approximately 7,000 c. p., as against 5,500 with the two-lens combination, which is an increase of about 30 per cent. The combination is as follows: A plano convex arc lens, with flat side toward arc; a plano convex next, also with flat side toward the light source, and then a bi-convex. This combination permits me to operate my arc at 2½ inches from surface of lens, with my front condenser exactly 1½ inches from aperture. True, there that Mr. Doane from 4 to 8 per cent, between air and glass at each surface, especially if the surfaces be not perfectly polished. Another thing to be considered is that thick lenses absorb more light than do thin ones. Condensers in 90 per cent, of cases are strained, especially in the short focal length sets, whereas the three-lens combination permits the use of comparatively long focal length lenses, with comparatively little spherical aberration. Of course I shall expect to be jumped on for advocating three lenses, but the time is coming when four lenses will be used; three in lamphouse and one at aperture.

Brother Smith sent several drawings, but they are hardly necessary, I think, of course, as I understand him, his whole idea hinges on bringing the close arc to the lens without resorting to short focal length lenses; also the lessening of spherical aberration. This matter I think I shall leave in the hands of brother Griffith, and such others as care to tackle it, with the notation that the three-lens combination is an old idea, one on which there has been but comparatively little experimenting done. But suppose an attempt to the projection of motion pictures in this country. Unless I am in error some foreign countries, particularly Germany, use the three-lens condenser almost exclusively. I am not posted at all, but any information on the question there being sufficient gain to offset the added cost, remembering that the optical distance from the arc to the lens as heat and flame will permit, without the use of any short focal length lenses. Spherical aberration in condenser is claimed by some to be a disadvantage by some.

By the way, what has become of our old friends Armstrong of Ashland, Wisconsin, and James, formerly of Camden, New Jersey, who used to make great interest on such papers in the magazines. In fact it was James who first started the light ray dope and I was also going on that subject. As to brother Smith, we welcome him back after a long silence. He is in London and we hear that he is well and has been writing letters without the aid of a map, guide and an interpreter. Smith used to write his letters with a carden rake. Glad you have lost the rake—of reformed.

He Has Trouble.

J. H. Varnum, Midland, Michigan, writes thusly:

This is my first offense, though have been reading your—beg pardon, "our" department for almost three years, and in do so have learned many things. Ought to be ashamed of yourself for not introducing yourself sooner, brother. You know this department depends on its friends—and enemies. If it still brings out for much more than a few dollars an edition like this. This little 0,000 population town depends mainly for its existence on a large chemical works now making gases for the Government. The town is rather small and little to the town of the Monarch, where I work, is largest and best. Wages at the "plant" are fairly high, hence the show business flourishes. We have only one picture show and two nights shows daily. And we have two Power's projectors, using about 65 volts, 60 lamps, 60 cycle current, with 8 inch White A. C. Special carbons, Picture 18 x 20 at 85 feet. All my trouble is with right hand machine. Firstly, there is considerable condenser breakdown. New arcs seldom runs more than three hours before it snuffs. This is caused by the flame hitting it. Tried to remedy it by moving lamp-house forward, but merely succeeded in getting a ghost. Second, the take-up tension won't work when I loosen it, and when I tighten it the film makes a grinding sound just as if a marble passes into the lower magazine. Machine is a new 6-16. Am in much favor in the left hand machine you speak of. Will you give me correct condenser combination for my condition.

Your last request answers your 'firstly.' You have wrong condenser combination, with arc too close to lens. Place flame would not strike same. If you are using 69 amperes A. C. you should have two 0.5 inch plano convex and one 0.2 inch plano-convex set not too close. On this basis a 0.2 inch plano-convex you should have a 0.5 next the arc and an 83 or about a 0.5 inch meniscus and an 0.1 inch bi-convex. If this does not keep the flame from the condenser, try setting a little more focal length lens ahead. As to the take-up tension it is difficult to locate the trouble with necessity if the projector be, as you say, a new one. If the machine is not too new the following examination may easily determine for yourself by noting if the reel centers with the flame valve or by watching it when running, opening the lower magazine door temporarily for the purpose.

Film Damage.

Clarence Webb, Kenosha, Wisconsin, has film trouble as follows:

Enclosed find two clippings from a Mutual Screen Telegram. In one side is a picture, a ride, or curl. Film is supposed to be first run, hence brand new. It came too late to allow of an examination before projection. Noticed damage after projection. It started about 25 feet from beginning, and ended about 10 feet from end of film. Only one or two sprocket holes were found, and almost all scenes were as per samples. Following this we projected another first run, which showed no damage whatsoever. Have been using the equipment for the machine. The machine is a model, but cannot find it. Have two 1916 simplex models. Can you tell me what could cause such a damage.

Now in case you may be interested in the construction of double cress. As shown in pictures of double cress, is as though one doubled the film back on itself toward the non-emulsion side along the inner edge of the sprocket holes on one side, and then turned it over and did the opposite for the same row of holes. Of course, the film would spring back nearly into shape, but the cress is there, or rather the two of them. I very much doubt you would be interested in a machine that would produce this damage just as one part of a film that way. The film was on the sprockets properly since there is no damage from sprocket teeth. Can anyone suggest the probable cause?

Proceedings Society Motion Picture Engineers Now Ready.

Proceedings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, meeting of April 28, 1918, are now ready for distribution, and may be had by remitting the sum of 25 cents each to W. E. Jenkins, president, 712 Eleventh street N. W., Washington, D. C. It is a 56-page, paper-bound booklet, and is well worth its small price. It is particularly of interest to projectionists by reason of the excellent papers on incandescent projection lamps, the same being by A. R. Dennington and by L. C. Porter and W. M. States. These papers should be in the hands of every projectionist who wishes to be up to date. They are well illustrated and written in clear English. There is an article on condensers by C. Francis Jenkins, with which the average projectionist is apt to take serious issue on many points. There is an article on projection lenses, by Alfred S. Cory, which will doubtless be of interest to such projectionists as may be trained opticians. There is an interesting article on the portable projector, by Alexander E. Victor, president Victor Anamhrograph Company, and an article by the editor of this department, addressed mostly to the society itself. That is about all which will interest the projectionist, I think, but I strongly advise its purchase by all projectionists, in the interest of the articles on the Mazda projection lamp. It is there the real value lies.

Cut-Over Switch.

Mears: Hay & Nicholas, Faribault, Minnesota, says:

We are appealing to you to tell us how to fix up a cut-over switch for using two projectors. Have a C. E. 60 cycle, 7½ b. h. three-phase, and wish to change from a 60 volt, 50 Ampere generator which we have used for one machine. Have obtained wonderful results with it, but having lately installed a second projector find lot of trouble striking second arc while first is burning. Have copy of third edition of Handbook and have studied it, but don't get quite what we need. For instance, it speaks of necessity for resistance in such cases, but does not say how much. That is one thing which puzzles us. Another thing we have volt meters, ammeters, and field rheostats and do not wish to use because of buying panel board having these things if it can be avoided. We particularly would like information as to amount of resistance necessary and diagram of cut-over switch wiring.

Resistance such as would enable you to burn both arcs at once would be a job for an electrical designer who had full knowledge of the subject, and also would be rather costly for a single installation. Your best plan would be to write the China Fits Pictures.

The J. P. Seeburg Piano Co., is in receipt of a very interesting paper from China. It is called The Review, and is published by the Empire Theater of Tientsin, China.

The paper is a special article concerning the installation in the Empire Theater of Tientsin, of one of the Style "V" Seeburg Organ Orchestras.

The first automatic organ, we believe, used in the Orient motion picture business.

Among other things, the article says:

Special attention is also being paid to our musical programs and in line with all the largest picture houses in America and elsewhere, we have made arrangements to install one of the famous Seeburg Organ Orchestras.

The result naturally the leader in all that pertains to pictures, and their musical accompaniments, but Is intensely gratifying to note that the right idea is spreading to such far-away lands as China. In America as music is a universal language, the time has come when producers should insist upon a proper musical presentation of their pictures in other countries. Manufacturers of musical instruments should enter these distant and fertile fields with a view to good business and a spreading of musical art. Publishers of music have an opportunity of enlarging their scope of selling operations and even leaders in America should not overlook the opportunities presented in the Orient.

Orchestra of Allen Theater, Toronto, Canada.

Our Toronto correspondent informs us that the Allen Theater has perfected a new and splendid organization under the leadership of Luigi Romanelli, and is leading the way in picture settings throughout the Dominion. The members of this orchestra consist of English, Belgian and Italian artists and is a unique combination of wood and brass, including 3 violins, 1 flute, 1 clarinet, 1 bass, 2 French horns and organ, piano and drummer.

The presence of trumpet and trombone is extremely pleasing, for we have continually maintained in our columns that the brass effect emanating from these instruments serves to detract from the picture. Mr. Romanelli, who was for many years director of the Strand Theater orchestra of Toronto, possibly the first musical director in Canada, has remarkable initiative ability and his choice of his orchestral instruments shows his keen insight into the picture game. He is an accomplished violinist himself, and frequently gives violin solos that are appreciated.

His present is to play with his orchestra rather than merely lead it. Upon this point we must take issue with Director Romanelli. It requires all the brains and the talent of the best musicians coupled with a thorough knowledge of picture fitting to obtain the best results in directing. When he is forced to play also, he cannot give his whole attention to his orchestra and his picture, and thus the general result suffers.

Our best wishes go out to Brother Romanelli and his orchestra.

M usical Suggestion Synopsis.

The character of this picture is intensely dramatic and deals with the present war situation in Europe. Open with a misterioso and agitate followed by the theme. You will then need some dramatic music, preferably in a naturalistic form. You will need agitato, and furtivous. Particularly note the battle effects, such as shots and explosions, motorcycle, automobile and train. A few light numbers can be used to advantage as contrast to the big stuff. Do not use more than one theme if you have a small combination. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph Exchange.

This is a society drama taking place upon an American estate. The music mainly will consist of light stuff, especially for the first three reels. Afterwards dramatic music will fit the climax of the feature. There is nothing particularly difficult about setting the music for this picture and long numbers will be found most adaptable. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Exchange.

HER BODY IN BOND (Universal—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderate. Suggest "If I Should Be You"—Scribner, "Elyzian Dreams"—Denp, or "Eleanor"—Denny.

The first reel of this feature can be lightly set with long numbers. Commencing the second there is room for some pathetic music needed. It should be short and the light stuff continued until the third reel. Dramatic music alone and other light stuff when three and three numbers should finish the reel. You will need a fox trot to open the fourth reel and continue with light stuff until the fifth. There is then required a large amount of dramatic music. heavy dramatic stuff will also be of service in the last reel and close with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal Exchange.

HIGHLAND SPRING, THE (Vitagraph—Three Reels)—Theme—Moderate. Suggest "Roses and Memories"—Spector, "Told at Twilight"—Heurter, or "Land of Dreams"—Drill.

The character of this picture is an emotional drama with the scene of action laid in a little village. There will be room for much pastoral stuff and little place for Photo-Play Series. The music will be light and vivace, please opening with touch of sadness. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph Exchange.

The character of this picture is an emotional drama with scenes laid in the North woods and later in a large city. Open with the Theme and follow with heavy dramatic music leading into an agitation. Light stuff follows for a reel, when the action develops dramatic values. The only effects are telephone bell, door bell and water, and under ordinary conditions it would be better to disregard them. Close with the Theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Film Exchange.

LOVE WATCHES (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Romance of Love"—Ascher, "Idile"—Lack, or "Love in Arcaey"—Wood.

This is a comedy-drama with an atmosphere which is distinctly French. You will need some pathetic, dramatic and oriental selections. From here you can use classical dance music. Light operatic selections could be used with excellent results. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph Exchange.

MIDNIGHT MADNESS (Bluebird—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderate. Suggest "My Castle in the Air"—Kern, "In Poppyland"—Albers, "Starry Night"—Heller.

Open with a rather heavy misterioso followed by a dramatic tension leading into the Theme. You will then require a busy, followed by a bright intermezzo and a couple of dramatics. You will need a fox trot, a waltz, and two marches besides some dramatic tensions. This will play the picture, closing with the Theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal Exchange.

Here you will need music contrasting in atmosphere, England and India. The story is intensely dramatic and requires heavy music throughout. You will need some pathetic, dramatics and oriental selections. Note explosions in the second reel, storm scenes towards the end. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Select Exchange.

YELLOW WHISTLE, THE (Pathé—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante and Russian. Suggest "Russian Romance"—Priml, Serenade, Tschalkowski, or "Elements Musical"—Moskowski.

This is a dramatic story wholly in theatricals, dealing in the atmosphere of Russia, dealing with the intrigues of the secret service and the police. It is intensely pathetic in some parts and requires 8-30 considerable music. Open with the Theme, followed by a plaintive Russian folk song. You will then need a slow dramatic working up into an agitation and returning again to the dramatic. Following the above scene you can play in a slight intermezzo, heavy dramatic and an agitation, followed by a pathetic after Anna stabs the Baron. Close with the Theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathé Exchange.

Hiller & Wilk Start Their Third Year
State Right Men Declare for Better Attractions for Maker and Exhibitor Through Open Market.

T O MOST of us August 1 was rent-day—but to Hiller & Wilk that date marked an event in their business lives. On August 1, 1916, this firm of independent film merchandisers began business in the Longacre Building. Their initial stock in trade was ideas and enterprise, and they have spent two eventful years in the process of increasing their effectiveness by adding more ideas and speeding up on enterprise. A few days before Hiller & Wilk started upon their third year a representative of the World called upon Mr. Wilk and asked him "How about it?"

"We started out with the determination to handle big productions along new lines," said Mr. Wilk, "and we believe that we have accomplished our purpose. We had to revise our plans somewhat, with the first few attractions we handled, but when we convinced William A. Brady that we could make more money out of 'The Whip' by our method than any other really big production had ever netted we were in a position to prove that our theories were sound. And prove it we did. "The Whip" put us on the map, and we put 'The Whip' across as big productions had never been in effect and profitable for everybody concerned. The state rights market used to be the dumping ground for any old film that was produced and could be got rid of in no other way. After producers had tried every other method of distribution for whatever they had on hand, they dumped it on to the open market.

"We believe that our entry into the field has brought about a change in the state rights system. To 'get across' on the independent market a production must now be better than the best of 'program' products. No longer can manufacturers dump their junk into the field and dispose of it to independent buyers. Features must now have the 'stuff' in them to make a real attraction before buyers will even 'take a look.'"

Manufacturers Waking Up to Open Booking Possibilities.

"Changes in the past two years prove that manufacturers are awakening to the possibilities of open booking. Some of the leading producers are organizing separate corporations for the purpose of promoting features that are capable of making more money for showmen (and the manufacturer) as independent attractions. There are several disgresses, but the real big features are 'state-righted' by firms who have always advocated the program just the same."

Taking a strictly personal view of the situation Mr. Wilk expressed the belief that his firm has been largely instrumental in opening this new field for exploitation of really big productions. "As a result of our promotion of 'The Whip,'" said Mr. Wilk, "producers were introduced to the possibilities of making more money out of better-class productions and expect to get increased revenue in showing to their patrons the best pictures that may possibly be secured from wherever source they may come."

"We have tried to build up a reputation for handling the best," Mr. Wilk, "and we have missed opportunities to make a lot of 'quick money' by turning down features that did not conform to our standards of ideas. What we have tried to do is win the confidence of the showmen we deal with and get them to come back to us for more and then to supply them only when the standard of the attraction meets our own tests.

"We have been two years building up established lines and authors are evidently laboring under the impression that we have established our reputation just as we had hoped to establish it through fair dealing," said Mr. Wilk, in concluding the interview.

Exhibitors Sign Up for Star Series
Managers in Many Large Cities Contract for Solid Bookings of Goldwyn's Fifty Productions.

E XHIBITOR approval of Goldwyn's Star Series booking policy is found in the signing, under solid bookings, for all fifty Goldwyn productions, of many of the great theatres in the larger cities of the United States.

Repeating its New York, Philadelphia and Chicago achievements of obtaining solid bookings from the most important exhibitors in those cities, Goldwyn has obtained similar contracts for Boston, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Denver, San Francisco, Toledo, Youngstown and more than a score of the larger cities in the past few days.

In Boston Jacob Lourie's Modern and Beacon theatres will be the first screen home of all fifty Goldwyn productions.

Ruben and Finkelstein's entire chain of Minneapolis and St. Paul houses will present in those big Northwestern cities all of the Goldwyn productions.

M. L. Markowitz's Strand Theatre on Market street, San Francisco, has signed for all Goldwyn productions for first run in the city at the Golden Gate.

In Denver S. L. Baxter, the exhibitor veteran of the Rocky Mountain region, has signed for all Goldwyn productions at his Isis Theatre, this being his second year as a Goldwyn exhibitor-customer.

Toledo's two biggest houses, the Temple and Alhambra, divide the Goldwyn productions, giving the company the city's two finest first runs. H. C. Horater, managing director of the Alhambra, has booked four star series and Edward A. Zorn of the Temple has booked three series.

In Minneapolis, Deichsel general manager of the new $500,000 Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, has cast the die and made his house "the home of Goldwyn Pictures in Youngstown."

J. E. Tompkins, has booked Goldwyn solid for his Liberty Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Gerahime Farrar's first production, "The Turn of the Wheel"; Mabel Normand's first Star Series production. "Peck's Bad Girl"; Tom Moore in "Just For Tonight," Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth"; and Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires" are all completed and within a few days will be shipped for advance showings under the supervision of the various Goldwyn managers to the twenty offices of North America.

The scenario department of Pathe is not now in the market for motion picture plays for the reason that the company is overstocked at this time. Serials exploiting a well-known star are preferred.

These ideas must be out of the ordinary and not along conventional lines. Do not submit manuscripts intended for the American Film Company to Pathe. A number of authors are misguidedly sending their work to Pathe, believing that Pathe is purchasing such plays. The scenarios intended for the American film company are to be directed to their offices in Chicago.

Lichtman Lands Many Big Signatures

Returns From Trip to Four Cities with Paramount-Arclart Contracts Approximating $1,000,000.

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned last week from a business trip to Minneapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee and Buffalo, and although he was gone considerably less than a week he came back with booking contracts in his pocket aggregating approximately $1,000,000, which he made in the cities named.

"My brief trip," said Mr. Lichtman upon his return, "measuring its results not merely by dollars and cents but by the increased satisfaction and eagerness to book Paramount and Arclart pictures which I met with everywhere, has convinced me, beyond all question of the optimism with which exhibitors are viewing the new famous topical productions released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

While in Chicago Mr. Lichtman and District Manager Max Goldstine closed with the firm of Ascher Brothers one of the largest bookings in the history of the Middle West. This contract covers service embracing the entire output of Paramount and Arclart pictures for the year 1918-19, for fourteen Chicago theatres controlled by this firm.

Contracts were also made with Lubliner & Trinz for twelve houses in their circuit; Balaban & Katz for two Chicago houses; Reuben & Finkelstein of Minneapolis and St. Paul; San Francisco-Laskey Corporation, for the Southwest; and Wickham & Landman of Milwaukee; Shea's Hippodrome of Buffalo.

Will It Be Movies In, Baseball Out?

John C. Flinn, Publicity Director for Famous Players-Lasky, is Working Hard on a "Yes" Answer.

BASEBALL, professionally and in leagues, departs this sporting life, until after the war, on Labor Day. Two days from now the World's Series will be started—and that'll be all about it for professional baseball until the Kaiser gets his final knockout. John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising for Famous Players-Lasky, being a baseball man, has witnessed the movement to convert the space generally used for baseball report, in a measure, at least, to the use of publicity for motion pictures, just as soon as Provo east Marshall Crowder had extended the "work or service" order to professional ball-letters.

Mr. Flinn sent the following telegram to sixty of the leading newspapers in the larger cities of the United States: "What are you going to do to fill baseball's place in your news columns? Do you realize that motion pictures are the national amusement? With half the motion picture news you gave baseball you can actually add circulation. Baseball pictures advertised with the same publicity as are a constant and increasing source of revenue. Baseball sold papers to men. Motion picture news sells papers to everybody. We can help you make motion pictures take the place baseball has decreed. For the interest that public service placed the wire, collect, your plans for using motion picture news to increase revenue and to hold circulation and reader interest. Thanks."

The comment is in the interest of exhibitors everywhere. Mr. Flinn cannot "put it over" all alone. Individual exhibitors, in big towns and small, who have their own interest at heart, will contribute their own suggestions to the movement, with a plan of action effectually carried in conjunction with their advertising. Of course, all of the space that usually goes to baseball may not be converted to the use of pictures—but every little bit helps.

Fennyvessey Is Now A Buck Private

Rochester Manager Quits Exempt Job as Liberty Theatre With Hooker to Phipps

A STORY of patriotism is told in the enlistment of Paul Fennyvessey of this city in the National Army, at a time when he held under the Commission on Training Camp Activities an appointment that was paying him a lot more than he is getting in the Army.

It was also considered advisable for Mr. Fennyvessey to avoid service in the National Army, under his classification in Class 3 as a necessary employee of the government, but he preferred to waive this and get into service as a buck private.

Mr. Fennyvessey, who was probably the youngest theatre manager in Rochester, had charge of the Strand, one of the theatres controlled by A. A. Fennyvessey, of that city. The experience of the younger Fennyvessey in the moving picture business as a theatre manager and film salesman made it easy for him to obtain an appointment as manager of a picture theatre under the Commission on Training Camp Activities.

For several months Mr. Fennyvessey was stationed in Texas, and had just been given the job of booking both films and plays for a string of five Liberty Theatres, in addition to managing one, when his order number was placed in the draft. He immediately said good-bye to his Liberty Theatre at Camp Bowie, Fort Worth, and is now attached to the 359th Machine Gun Battalion, Eighty-seventh Division, Camp Dix, New Jersey, and will be glad to hear from all of his old friends.

BEST FILMS AT MINIMUM COST

The War Department, Commission on Training Camp Activities, operating the Liberty theatres, has secured from the following picture makers the privilege of using any of their pictures at such a minimum cost as will barely cover rekindling and shipping of films: Paramount, Arclart, Fox, Goldwyn, Metro, Mutual, Triangle.
Roosevelt Backs Anti-Yellow Dogism

In Characteristic Letter He Says It Is No One Man's War
But the American People's.

I

Making a reality of the campaign against yellow dogism, which forms the basis of Hiram Johnson's interesting story of present-day life, "The Yellow Dog," has attracted the attention and called forth the personal praise of Theodore Roosevelt and has been assured the support of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America.

In a letter addressed to Charles J. Giegerich, who is in charge of the nation-wide campaign to form anti-yellow dog clubs and organize the "boy power" of America, Mr. Roosevelt, commending the undertaking, says:

July 18, 1918.

My dear Mr. Giegerich:

I wish you all good luck in your effort to start the anti-yellow dog clubs. It is the duty of the American people to carry this fight through to a finish. It is our duty to insist upon a hundred per cent. Americanism in this land and to tolerate no divided allegiance. It is our duty to back up the Government in extending the draft, in encouraging and insisting upon the speeding up of our war-plane program, our field-gun program and every other industry connected with the war, and to back it up in sending the greatest possible number of our servants abroad until we get an army on the fighting line bigger than the combined lines of France and England.

It is our duty to stand by every public servant who effectively carries on his work and pays his debt along these lines. It is no less our duty to fearlessly oppose any public servant who fails in any point to perform such duty. This isn't any one man's war, and it isn't any Government organization's war; it's the war of the American people. It's their duty to see that all their servants carry it on with the highest efficiency.

With all good wishes,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Charles J. Giegerich, Deputy, Anti-Yellow Dog Club, 730 Seventh Avenue.

The American Defense Society, in assuring its co-operation and support, takes occasion to issue the following editorial on "The Yellow Dog" for having written a story of interesting, humorous fiction that delivers in its lines "An effective blow against the agents of German propaganda."

In the campaign of anti-yellow dog clubs have been started the mayor and chief of police are co-operating in the campaign, and when the film version of "The Yellow Dog" is released the campaign against German-made undertones of unrest will receive added stimulus.

Exhibitors Commend New Fox Policy

Announcement of 1918-19 Plans Arouses Interest of Showmen in Large and Small Towns.

COMMENDATION of the William Fox policy for 1918-19 is contained in numerous letters from exhibitors which the Fox Film Corporation has received since its announcement last week. Exhibitors, says a statement by the Fox corporation, are unanimous in their statements that the arrangements of release of Fox pictures during the year beginning September 1 will be a great assistance to theatre owners.

Greater flexibility in the choice of stars is one thing noted in the declaration, and it is expected, with any number of Fox-Lehman-Williams, four additional Jeff Animated Cartoons, every section of the country, it is expected, will have little difficulty in exhibiting the pictures which are most popular in that particular locality.

It is also stated over the fact that Miss Bari will appear in "When a Woman Sins" early in the fall and also in "The She-Devil."

In regard to the announcement that William Farnum will write his own pictures based on Zane Grey novels, there has been many approving letters.

Much interest was shown in the trade by the announcement of a number of big timely pictures which William Fox has made, among them "The Prussian Cuir" and "Why America Will Win."

Considerable mystery surrounds the announcement of the Fox production, "Why I Would Not Marry." The nature of the film, who the star will be and all other facts regarding the picture are guarded with jealous secrecy. In fact, the only statement published so far is the twenty-sentence message which has come from the Fox office that it is "the story of a most beautiful woman in the world, and her problem."

Approval has been the greeting of the new Victory Pictures. In fact, three of the picture are already assured of success, the three foremost stars, Victory Pictures have already scored with exhibitors, if letters from theatre managers are any criterion. Warm praise has been received for Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and Will Power of the "Walking Man." In this connection several exhibitors, the Fox office states, have written in commending the William Fox policy of buying only the best stories for his pictures during the current year.

The Excel Pictures announcement also has made a hit with the exhibitors. The growing popularity of Jane and Katherine Lee, Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland and Jewel Carmen has been reflected in the box-office response.

THE recruiting officer in a medium-sized city turned a volunteer down because he was physically unfit to fight in the trenches. The young man was anxious to fight; he was anxious to get at the dirty Boche and his swastikas, officer. He was fit enough. His height was all right; his heart was in good condition; his feet were fairly .

But he wasn't allowed his regular job to interfere with his fighting. No, sir; not at all!

Do you know what that $3,000 will do toward winning the war? Ask any recruiting officer. I'll tell you and then you'll know why the Kaiser fears ideas more than he does guns. He knows he can't fight ideas. He is at the head of an army of cattle. Cattle must be driven. They can't fight ideas as fast-chocking train as they can guns. They can't fight ideas as fast-chopping train as.

You men at the head of concerns manned by salespeople with ideas, are you helping them fight? You are if you have a War Savings Stamp department where stamps are sold every day.

Tell this story to your associates. It will help them and you fight, and remember every dollar helps the gamer and the mop-up man over there.

War Board Meets Film Men's Requests
Not Policy or Intent of Government to Impose Needless Restrictions on Manufacturers, Says Chairman.

VANCE McCORMICK, chairman of the War Trade Board, has written the following self-explanatory letter to thirty-five members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry:

"The requests and suggestions for a modification of the regulations governing the exportation of motion picture film, submitted on June 26 in accordance with a four-letter of July 12, by Paul Cronell and in personal conferences with representatives of the industry have received careful consideration by the board and they are in the nature of suggestions for the board to impose unnecessary or needlessly hampering restrictions upon any branch of American export business or without good reason to the detriment of our export trade, the maintenance of which is of importance for war reasons. This consideration applies particularly to the export of motion picture film since the educational effect of film of a suitable character is of recognized value."

"After consultation with the Committee on Public Information the board has found it possible to meet your wishes to the extent of dispensing with the requirement of film destined for Great Britain and its Dominions and colonies and for France and Italy consigned to a representative designated by the War Trade Board and that the special agreement (Supplemental Form X-20) be signed for such shipments. As was explained by the War Trade Board to the Committee, which wrote to the author, it was not thought at the time when the general regulations covering exports to all countries were drafted that these feasible countries would be restrictions upon the exports of film to the countries in question. The proposed agreement was so obviously a matter of form for countries whose policy upon motion picture houses has long since been banished that a special set of regulations to complicate the procedure was not thought necessary.

"The board will require upon film exported to these Allied countries only a guarantee against re-export, to prevent American countries only a guarantee against re-export, to prevent American exchange of film by circuitous routes into neutral countries to which the regulations of Form X-20 still apply.

"It does not, however, appear possible to dispense with the requirement that exports of film to neutral countries be covered by a receipt, filed with the War Trade Board under the Enemy Influence or control or exhibiting enemy film. Not only does the general policy of the War Trade Board apply to dealings with houses which employed in the enemy propaganda, but the success which has already been attained in combating propaganda in European neutral countries, particularly in Scandinavia, by the imposition of such restrictions quite justifies a continuation of this policy.

"The board still has under consideration the question of a request for facilities for the re-export of raw stock and the changes in the phraseology of the supplemental form suggested by you. Our representatives abroad have also been instructed to keep this question and the question of re-export from the countries to which relief has been given from the phrasing of this clause in cases where such re-export appears objectionable, without referring the matter to Washington for decision.

"The board in its regulations (paragraph G of the agreement) to interfere with the usual cuts and changes in film, but only to provide against changes which would change the identifiable form of a picture as such, would be made immediately.

Tucker Now to Direct Anita Stewart
Terms of Contract Said to Allow Well Known Director Full Scope to Turn Out Real Box Office Attractions.

CONSIDERABLE interest attaches to the announcement that Louis B. Mayer has completed arrangements with George Loane Tucker, whereby the latter will direct Anita Stewart in her new series of de-luxe productions to be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

George Loane Tucker is generally acknowledged by both English and American film critics to stand at the head of his profession. While a native American, Mr. Tucker spent several of his formative years in Great Britain, where he filmed "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Rupert of Hentzau" by Anthony Hope; "The Middleman," well known to American audiences through the national legitimate tours of E. S. Willard; "The Christian" and "The Manxman" by Hall Steinman, and "The Hypocrites" by Henry Arthur Jones.

Mr. Tucker was in England at the outset of the war associated with the London Film Company, and during the following six months devoted his time entirely to the making of the pictures to aid Allied war aims and assist in recruiting.

Upon his return to America, about a year ago, Mr. Tucker became associated with the Goldwyn organization, and turned out three of the best productions recently released by that company. These were "Dodging a Million," "The Cinderella Man" and "Joan of Plattsburg."

"I prepare my own working scripts," Mr. Tucker stated in the course of a recent interview, "and am happy to say that I have never yet had trouble with an author over my manner of handling this work. It is always my aim to retain the spirit of an author's conception and not 'adapt' it out of all semblance to the original. In this connection it is gratifiing to state that there will be no 'time limit' on the pictures I will make, starring Miss Stewart. Every production will be the best of which we are capable, regardless of the number of days or weeks required to make it so."

Roberson-Cole Makes Big Foreign Deal
Acquires "Tarzan of the Apes" and Its Sequel for Large Slices of Territory—Other Sales.

One of the biggest foreign rights deals of the year was consummated last week when the Roberson-Cole Company took over the rights for "Tarzan of the Apes," together with its sequel, "The Romance of Tarzan," from the National Film Corporation of America for Great Britain and its colonies, exclusive of Canada and Australia. The consideration involved is said to be $75,000.

The Roberson-Cole company has also closed with the North American Motion Picture Corporation of Buenos Aires and New York for the distribution of the Roberson-Cole productions in Argentina, Paraguay and Uruguay. Another deal just closed is the sale to the Co-operative Company of "The Cast-Off," "The Fingers of Justice," "The Nickel Man" and "The Eagles' Eye" for Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Due to the increase in its business in the last few months the Roberson-Cole has again been forced to expand its facilities, and has leased several rooms adjoining its headquarters at 1600 Broadway.

Canadian Exchanges Cut Out Old Film.
Several Canadian exchanges have discarded a quantity of ancient films which had been lying in their vaults because of the collection of a special war tax from exhibitors in the shape of a 15 cent per reel a day assessment whenever a picture is in use. With such a tax there was no demand for old pictures.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Story of North Woods Is

The title of Edith Storey's forthcoming Metro feature production is "The Silent Woman." It was previously known as "Shadow and Substance." "The Silent Woman" is a romance of the North woods. Nan McDonald is a clerk in a Hudson Bay trading post. She is affectionately called "the angel of the lumberjacks."

This five-act feature was directed by Herbert Blanche, adapted by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanagh from Lois Zellner's original story. George K. Hol- lier was the cameraman. The strong cast surrounding Miss Storey includes Frank Mills in the role of John Lowery, her husband.

Joseph Kilgour has the part of the villain. Baby Ivy Ward has the appealing role of little billy. Lillie Leslie makes her first appearance with Metro in the part of Mary Lowery. T. Taniyama, one of the best known Japanese actors in the theatrical profession, is included in the cast.
Other well known people are George Stevens, Augusta Perry, Harry Linsen, New Berlin, and John Cobhill.

The subject will be released in Metro's All-Star Series August 26.

Good Bookings for Kenyon Picture.

In addition to the first run bookings in New York, William L. Sherry reports a good demand for "The Street of Seven Stars," the first picture produced by De Luxe Pictures, Inc., with Doris Kenyon as the head of her own company. John D. Sorocco, manager of the Park theatre in Boston, has booked the picture for the week of August 12 to be followed by bookings in all of the important houses in the Hub.

Another booking is in the entire circuit of Ascher Brothers—Lubliner & Trinz in the third largest booking in the country.

Lillian Walker's First Is

"Embarrassment of Riches"

The title of the first of the series of eight "happy pictures," as they have been called, by Miss Lillian Walker is "The Embarrassment of Riches." The subject is hearing combination of the Tischman studio in New Rochelle, and announcement of the release date is promised in the immediate future. The second picture has been selected.

Miss Walker's first story is a most happy choice with which to start her series of pictures. Louis K. Amspacker is the author. The play enjoyed a prosperous two seasons' run in New York, and is predicted by those qualified to know that as a motion picture it will prove even a bigger hit than it did on the stage. It is full of picture punch, with a novel treatment that is different and a great human appeal.

Contrary to the usual reservation of directors in accepting a play or book, Edward Dillion, who has been engaged as supervising director of the Lillian Walker Productions, went on record in advance of its production in declaring it to be a story that could not miss fire.

With the announcement of the releasing arrangements for "The Embarrassment of Riches" the Lillian Walker series will probably come also the details of the organization of the new producing combination, of which the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation is one of the units. This is for its first release picture distribution of pictures for distribution on a co-partnership basis. The pictures produced by the Lillian Walker Corporation will include each of several star series to be presented by the new combination in the near future. It is reported that the output of three additional stars have already been contracted for, and it is said the new organization will seek not only to make its own films which have heretofore been classed as independents.

Mr. Park, the president and general manager of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, is said to be closely identified with the producing work. Mr. Park has been active for more than a year in furthering a closer relationship between exhibitor and producer, and in the new combination, as well as his own releasing arrangements, are expected to reflect his activities in this direction.

Gail Kane's Release for September Is Love Story

GAIL KANE'S new production, "Love's Law," is the release by Mutual September 1, is a love story with a new angle. Those who have been favored with advance showings of "Love's Law" are of the opinion that it is one of the best plays Joseph P. Loder has produced and certainly one of the most satisfactory vehicles ever afforded Miss Kane. J. Clarkson Miller, who wrote the scenario, is proud of the material and is enthusiastic about the completed picture.

Supporting Miss Kane in the cast are her leading man, Courtenay Foote, Reed Hamilton, Frederick Jones, Mathilde Baring, and Emma Noyes. Francois J. Grandon is directing Miss Kane, who will produce eight feature plays for Mutual release.
Violet Mersereau Again
a Universal Bluebird Star

AFTERT a period of several months' inactivity the Bluebird has opened its studio at Coyoteville again. The occupant will be Violet Mersereau, who has contributed some of the most popular photoplays of the recent past. Miss Mersereau started work at the studio one week after her return from the ball at Boston, when she purchased a variegated wardrobe which she will require in this Bluebird photoplay, which is being made under the provisional title of "Together." O. A. C. Land has been engaged to direct Miss Mersereau, and will have entire charge of the production, but Miss Mersereau will have charge of the studio as well. He has chosen a story written by H. Wolheim which was published as a magazine story under the title of "The Lone Dil." Anticipating that very few people would know what a "dil" was, he decided to call the story "Together." Incidentally it may be explained that a dil is a crook, and that Miss Mersereau in the new production will play a dual role, that of a young society woman and her twin brother who has not followed the straight and narrow path. Mr. Land has already engaged Chester Barnett and Barney Randall to support Miss Mersereau.

Mrs. Castle Dances in Pathé Film.

Every one likes to see Mrs. Castle trip the light fantastic, but every one does not like to pay from $2 to $5 to see this queen of all dances display her skill. However, in "The Girl from Bohemia," the Pathé five-reel comedy-drama, Mrs. Castle is given an opportunity to exhibit a number of the latest dance steps such as won her fame in two hemispheres. Not only does Mrs. Castle present her latest dances, but she also wears a large number of beautiful gowns of the latest designs, and these will certainly be very interesting to the feminine members of any motion picture audience.

World Announces Dressler Comedy.

World Pictures announce another Marie Dressler comedy is to be added to the list of comedies released by this organization. It bears the title of "The Scrub Lady" and is scheduled for general distribution on September 1.

Miss Dressler is making her pictures at her studio near Los Angeles, and will remain in the west all this winter with the possible exception of the time she will give the Government on the next war loan, which commences late in September.

Mabel Normand Has Good Support in "Peck's Bad Girl"

PLAYERS of exceptional merit, well known for their work in stage and screen productions, give Mabel Normand admirable support in her newest Goldwyn picture, "Peck's Bad Girl," by Tex Charwat, this star's first production of Goldwyn's new year.

For her leading man the star has Earle Foxe, for several years a contributor to the success of prominent screen productions, and before his entry into motion picture work identified with many stage successes. On the screen Foxe has done his best work in "The Escape," "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "The Love Mask" and in the Pathé serial, "The Fatal Ring.

Corinne Barker, an actress of beauty and dramatic talent, plays the role of Hortense Martinot. Miss Barker enjoys an enviable screen career and played a prominent role with Mae Marsh in "Money Mad."

Ryley Hatch is intrusted with an important part in the Mabel Normand production. Hatch is known for his work in several successful stage plays, the most noteworthy of which was his performance in Mosesco's "Help Wanted."

On the screen he has been equally successful, Blanche Davenport, well known on the stage and screen for her splendid characterizations, also supports Miss Normand.

Fred Stone Putting Over Some Remarkable Dancing

FRED STONE caused a sensation at the Lasky studio recently when he went through a series of his eccentric dances in the making of his new Arcraft picture, "Johnny Get Your Gun." The scenes took place in a ballroom set, with extra people in evening clothes making a wide circle about the famous comedian. No one, not even Donald Crisp, Stone's director, knew what the director was going to do. But suddenly the music and the camera started simultaneously, and he began shooting from one side door of the ballroom.

Stone's dance was so swift and daring that it baffles description. The business of the extra people was to applaud, and they did so with the greatest enthusiasm, for they had never seen anything like Stone before. First Fred was on his feet moving slowly, then he would make a sudden twist, land on his shoulder and straighten up suddenly to assume a comic posture. And when the applause was at its height he suddenly skimmmed across the floor and out the door. This was only the first of his dances. Others as fantastic and amusing followed. The eccentric dances are only one of the many features announced in "Johnny Get Your Gun."

World Purchases Gambier Story.

For the past six months the scenario department of World Pictures has tried to get in touch with Kenyon Gambier, the author of "The Hughe Black One-Eyed Man," which appeared a year or so ago in the Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Gambier finally received the message and, as he expressed it, "there were so many post marks on the envelope that it was hardly decipherable." He was willing to tell the story for picture purposes. He invited an offer. The deal was consummated by telegraph. The story was turned over to a force of continuity workers and Montage love will begin work on the picture within the next few weeks.
Triangle Has Ten Directors Working at Culver City

That Triangle intends carrying on an intensive campaign of pictures making is evidenced by the fact that at no time in the recent history of the corporation has it had so many names of reputation working on productions as at present. To the well known names of Christy Cabanne, Cliff Smith, William Dowlan, Albert Parker, Gilbert P. Hamilton, Frank Borzage, Henry Otto, and Thomas Heffron there must be added those of Jack Conway and E. Mason Hopper. The arrival of Taylor Holmes, bringing his own director, adds still another name to the list, making ten in all. With such a battery of directors "shooting" at one time under the Triangle trademark a great output of superior feature productions may be looked for.

Taylor Holmes will be featured in a comedy drama by Jean Havesent entitled "His Father's Safety Razor." The plot of the story has not as yet been given out, but it is said to be a medium which will give full play to all the inimitable qualities for which this comedian is noted.

Lawrence Windom will handle the megaphone for Mr. Holmes, and a carefully selected cast will support him.

Jack Conway will direct "Mountain Law," and "Hunting the Kid, " Jack Richardson, Frank Pearce, and other well known stars will appear in the cast. intensification of the production, directed by Claire Swanson in "The Secret Code," by Ada Rogers St. Johns. It is a psychological study of married life seen from the angle of the neglected wife, with a mystery element cleverly interwoven.

Jack Abbe, Triangle's clever little Japanese star, will be featured in a new picture entitled "The Spirit of Adventure," of which he is co-author with E. Magnus Ingleton, of the Triangle scenario department.

William Dowlan is scheduled to direct "The Atom," the work of Catherine Carr, head of Triangle's staff of continuity writers, and in it Director Dowlan will again have Pauline Starke for the featured role.

Three other productions, titles not announced yet, are in course of preparation, and, with the technical and construction departments working overtime, it would seem as if "busy" will be Triangle's middle name for several weeks to come.

Bessie Love Is Now a Star for Vitagraph

Bessie Love, for several years past a star of growing popularity, has been signed as a star by Vitagraph. Albert E. Smith, president of the company, states that Miss Love already has begun preparations for her first picture, which will be made at the company's Hollywood studio. She will be directed by David Smith.

The acquisition of Miss Love comes close upon the revelation of expansive plans by Vitagraph. This expansion, which includes the acquisition of a number of new stars, the inauguration of a fixed serial policy, the enlargement and improvement of the company's Western studio, and other similar moves, would seem to be the forerunner of an important announcement by Vitagraph which may mark a new epoch in the company's history.

Bessie Love stands out among the younger stars through her work under direction of Griffith and Ince, and, more recently, because of the tremendous exploitation she received at the hands of the Pathé Company, for which she made four features. She is a native daughter of California, born in Los Angeles, and graduated from the high school there. Starting her career under the direction of Griffith at the Triangle, Fine Arts studio she appeared in numerous important productions, among them "The Heiress of Coffee Dan's," "The Doll's Ship," and "Nina, the Flower Girl."

Subsequently she came under the direction of Thomas H. Ince, and was featured in "The Sawdust Ring," "Wee Lady Betty," "R jintin Polly Ann," and others.

President Smith states that Miss Love will appear in Blue Ribbon features exclusively, the first of which will be released early in November. He says he plans to buy only stories and plays which he considers suited to Miss Love's personality, and that her pictures will be given the most careful consideration from every standpoint.

Will Rogers

Will Rogers, Famous cowboy wit of the Ziegfeld "Polies," as he appears in the name role of "Laughing Bill Hyde," a Rex Beach story now in the making at the Goldwyn studios.

"Friend Husband" is a Most Compelling Brute

With the constant search for novelty it is not surprising that motion picture producers—the more enterprising of them—occasionally succeed in reversing some of the old situations, or at least varying them. Such is the case with "Friend Husband," in which Goldwyn Picture Madge Kennedy is soon to be seen.

Instead of employing forceful methods to bring the girl he loves to terms, the man in "Friend Husband" happens to be married to her. In fact, they are on their honeymoon when he decides on the daring course which finally causes her to capitulate and give him her love.

Until this moment love had played no part in the unusual marriage, convenience being the reason Madge Kennedy chose to go through the nuptial ceremony with him, hoping that it would end there and she would be free to enjoy the monetary benefit derived through a certain will. But the man, being a cave creature for all his conventional exterior, would not let the marriage end there and promptly dragged Madge off to his cave—or, to be more exact, his island.

There his tactics departed somewhat from the popular formula. The bridegroom did not resort to violence, firmness being the extent of his strength. Nor did he refuse to allow his wife to wear her pretty honeymoon frocks. But—he did make her work for her living.
A affiliated Will Build National Distributing System

Following a week spent at the executive offices of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, Com a J. Clark, of Grand Rapids, treasurer of that organization, has left for Chicago. Mr. Clark will remain there, it is understood, an important announcement will be made having to do with the active operation of the organization.

One of the objects of Mr. Clark’s trip to New York was to confer with Charles C. Frohman, the well-known president of the organization, and Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of its board of directors, regarding the physical handling of the Affiliated product.

Negotiations are in progress whereby the contract showing the projection of Affiliated prints and paper by a nationally organized distributing system will be placed in the hands of the directors of the Affiliated within the next few days.

The purpose of contracting for such service is to save the exhibitors of the country the expense of maintaining another distributing organization. The employment of an already existing organization of Affiliated prints and paper by a nationally organized distributing system will be placed in the hands of the directors of the Affiliated within the next few days.

Brady, manager, Fox Film Corporation's office at Buffalo reports a big increase in business in all lines of films, "A Daughter of the Gods," R. A. Walsh's drama, "Woman and the Law," and "The Blindness of Duvoros" are reported as being exceptionally popular. The lobby displays used at the Strand during this showing have attracted attention. Mr. Crabbs is an artist and designed the displays himself.

The run of the Annette Kellerman picture has also been extended at the Drachen Theatre, Dunkirk, N. Y., and at Haven's Opera House,OLEAN, N. Y., Fred Bitner, who has just taken over this latter house, reports an exceptionally heavy business. DeMille's Latest Effort

SOUNDS LIKE REGULAR STORY

T HE Cecil B. DeMille special production for Arclight, "Till I Come Back to You," which will be released Aug. 26, deals with the war, but from an angle hitherto unknown to the screen producers and scenario writers. It is an original story by Jeanie MacPherson. The psychological treatment which is applied to certain situations growing out of the terrific struggle forms a large part of the story. One actuality story concerns a Belgian girl who marries a German before the war and repents of it later and counts.

A young American officer is involved in the plot, becomes a factor in the life of the Belgian woman whose husband is killed takes her for his own. But the peculiar pathos and inspiration of the situation is so lovely, so humanitarian, the Belgians; the brave deed of one little Belgian boy who saves a whole schoolful of little waifs; the manner in which they save their lives the American officer is forced to sacrifice the labor of months and is later made master of the boy, can be saved in turn by the child—these are some of the points which render the story different from the usual customary war picture. There is little "battle stuff," but plenty of excitement.

Adolph Washburn plays the American officer, and Florence Vidor is the Belgian girl-wife. G. Butler Clonough is the German husband.

C. B. DeMille is enthusiastic over the picture, upon which he is laying the greatest care and attention.

Carol Holloway in Wolfville Tale.

Carol Holloway, well known for her work in serials with William Duncan, marks another successful serial with this installment of "Wolfville Tale" this week in "The Jest of Talty Jones," a General Film release. Featured with her is William Lester, who is playing prominent parts in the other stories of the series, and Robert Burns, Hattie Buckirk, and Charles Force. That strong note of comedy runs throughout the two-reel story, which is not without its touch of the dramatic.

Following the Wolfville release will come "Springtime a La Carte," another O. Henry story, with Edward Fox and Agnes Ayres, the popular stars of recent Broadway Star Features successes.

The sub-titles in "Queen of the Sea," the submarine pantomime which William Fox is now releasing, are of a different sort. Originally of his big, timely pictures, are declared to be of exceptional literary merit. Annette Kellerman's Churchill Enterprise has booked the complete Fox service. As the production is a big pantomime the sub-titles had to be of a nature in keeping with the beauty and picturesqueness of the picture. Miss Hettie Gray Baker of the Fox Film Corporation spent several weeks in writing the sub-titles alone. These, it is said, breathe the poetry and delicacy of the picture, without being banal or forced.

"Playthings" Is Universal's Bluebird for August 12

Douglas Gerrard, well known Bluebird director, who had charge of the production, engineered the contract for Miss Brunette, including Myrtle Eccles, Lewis J. Cody, Mary Anderson, Charles Gerrard, Phil Dunham and F. A. Turner.

When the production came in from the eastern coast, it was reviewed by the reviewing committee that an earlier place on the Bluebird program was justified. For this reason the program was therefore made that "Playthings" will be the regular Bluebird release for August 12, and will be followed by a special feature, "Devil Baiters," which will be released one week later, on August 19.
Southern Have Call
In Forthcoming Metro

KILDARE OF STORM" will be Emily Stevens' next starring vehicle in Metro's All-Star Series. The story mirrors picturesque and typical phases of the South, having been written by Eleanor Mercein Kelly, a Southern author. Miss Stevens is not a Southerner, but most of those associated with her in the production of "Kildare of Storm" were born below the Mason and Dixon line.

King Baggot, who plays Kildare, and the director, Harry L. Franklin, both hail from St. Louis, Mo., where Director Franklin received his first theatrical training in St. Louis under the tutelage of Col. John D. Hopkins, while King Baggot frequently returned to St. Louis in stock companies and road productions. He and Franklin kept track of each other's careers, but their trails never crossed until the Metro production of "Kildare of Storm."

Jere Looney, who prepared the screen version of the story for the use of Miss Stevens, is also a Southerner. Mr. Looney hails from "furthest south" of any of those identified with the production, as he was born in Shreveport, La., and his knowledge of the South enabled him to retain the spirit of Miss Kelly's novel in adapting it to the screen. Another Southerner in the cast is Edwards Davies, who has the important role of Calhorne. He was minister before he decided to change his profession for that of the stage. He first starred in vaudeville acts throughout the country.

An interesting coincidence is that one member of the cast in "Kildare of Storm," King Baggot, founded the Screen Club, the first club in the world entirely devoted to motion picture players, and that Edwards Davies, another member, is president of the Green Room Club, one of the oldest and best known of the theatrical organizations.

Still another member of the "Kildare of Storm" company to call the Southern home is P. Thad Volkman, who is assisting Harry Franklin in directing the production. Mr. Volkman comes from San Antonio, Texas, and has traveled extensively through all the Southern states. He was a newspaper man before being identified with the screen. Mr. Volkman has been connected with Metro almost since the firm began making pictures, and has been associated with several Metro stars and directors.

George Spoor's "Young America" Has Been Completed

PHOTOGRAPHIC work on both interior and exterior scenes in "Young America," the new George K. Spoor feature taken from the Cohan and Harris success written by Fred setEmail, has practically been completed.

Director Arthur Berthelet starts work immediately on editing the film, and it shortly will be ready for release. Inquiries already are coming to Essanay in regard to the release of the picture and as to when it can be booked. Exhibitors who have seen the play on the stage or know personally of its qualities are particularly anxious to show it.

Besides carrying an unusually strong and timely plot the picture is attractive photographically, the most elaborate care having been taken with the interior settings and the exteriors selected both from the point of their suitableness and beauty.

The cast was specially picked from several cities for the various parts, mostly from New York and Chicago, so that each character is the best adapted to the role taken that could be found. It is believed that the play as a whole will be an unusually strong one.

Niles Welch Signs With Famous Players-Lasky

NILES WELCH, one of the more talented and experienced of the younger screen actors, has signed a four-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under the terms of which he will appear as a featured player in support of Paramount and Arcaft stars. In making this announcement, Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky said: "Ever since the success of Mr. Welch when he played the leading juvenile role opposite Marguerite Clark in 'Miss George Washington,' at which time we received innumerable letters from exhibitors and admirers of his work, many of whom suggested that he ought to be featured regularly in Paramount pictures, I have been trying to engage him. I am much gratified at finally having secured his signature to a four-year contract, as I consider Niles Welch one of the most promising juveniles on the screen."

Mr. Welch was born in Hartford, Conn., and received his early education in France and England, his parents having spent the greater share of their time in Europe during that period of his life. He attended St. Paul's School at Concord, N. H., and entered Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, with the class of 1909. From there he went to Columbia University, where he was prominent in all student activities, including football and rowing. Also he was active in varsity theatricals, and after leaving college he played in stock for three years. His first motion picture engagement was with Vitagraph, with which company he was identified for a year. He then appeared for a year in Metro productions, and since has been seen in Paramount, World, Universal, Pathe, Select, and Goldwyn pictures.
French Army Takes Picture of Celebrating Americans

THE title of a two-reel production scheduled for immediate release by Pathe is “Fourth of July in France.” It was photographed by the cinematographic division of the French Army, and was obtained by Pathe from the French Pictorial Service.

The motion pictures making up this subject have just been received from France, and are full of absorbing interest in every detail for the reason that they show Uncle Sam’s boys at the Independence Day celebration in the land of the lilies.

A brief resume of the interesting scenes in this film show the unusual character of the production. We see our boys on parade at the main square of a little Alsatian town. This town the Sammers rescued from the grasp of the Hun, and they are being showered with flowers and good wishes by the Alsatians who long were under the iron heel of the German Government.

The scenes shift to Paris, where all the Allied countries joined together in the celebration of Uncle Sam’s Fourth of July. We see President Poincare accompanied by General Joffre, the Governor General of Paris, Ambassador Sharp, and other dignitaries assembled to review the parade along the Paris boulevard held in honor of the United States and her Independence Day.

And down the Avenue President Wilson, formerly Tressdans Avenue, renamed by the French in honor of our President, we see Allied soldiers marching midst the fluttering flags of the Allied governments in which the stars and stripes predominated.

In this two-reel production many interior pictures carrying intense human interest are presented.

As a box-office attraction there can be no question as to its value. The newspapers of the land gave the celebration of the Fourth in France the widest publicity. Joined with the intense interest of the public in our soldiers in France is also a widespread pride in the recognition by our brave ally of America’s greatest holiday. The “Fourth of July in France” is certain to attract the widest attention.

“Inside the Lines” (Word).

The current release on Word program of the five-reel feature, “Inside the Lines,” with Lewis S. Stone as the star, is still a big box-office winner in the legitimate theatres. A revival of this Broadway success was made in Boston, and, though it had a long run there during its first visit to that city, it is now in its twelfth week. So pronounced is the success it is now meeting with that plans are being formulated for several companies to tour it in the coming season. The timeliness of this picture is best illustrated by the recent disclosures of the activities of German authorities from Wilhelmstrasse.

They spent over thirty million dollars in perfecting an organization to disseminate propaganda in this country by buying up a large number of daily papers scattered throughout the United States.

Inside the Lines” is the best of all the plays shown to date that illustrate the methods of the German Government in insidiously sowing the seed of doubt and discontent to nullify the aims of our Government to bring this war to a successful termination.

Real Western Atmosphere

For Farrar’s “Hell Cat”

W ITH the first episodes of Goldwyn’s production of “The Hell Cat,” nearing completion in Cody, Wyoming, Geraldine Farrar and her company are preparing to travel further toward the heart of the West for the remaining scenes of Willard Mack’s drama. The daily program of the international celebrity has been one calculated to tax the endurance of anyone but herself. Arising at 6 in the morning, she rides on the pony placed at her disposal by the citizens of Cody to the Hargreaves Ranch on Cottonwood Creek, about five miles from the town, where she is joined by Reginald Barker, her director, and the other members of her company in time to shoot the first scene at 7.30. Work continues until the same hour in the evening, so brilliant is the sun.

The ranch is typical of that section of the country and includes everything to be found on the place of a well-to-do sheep raiser, although it was found necessary to add much more than the place at first afforded. For the burning of the ranchhouse a duplicate interior of that building has been erected on the place. After the fire scenes are photographed Geraldine Farrar and her associates will forsake Cody for a fifty-mile pilgrimage into the cattle country.

Arrangements have been made with Winthrop Holley Brooks, owner of Valley Ranch, one of the show places of the country, whereby the place is turned over to Goldwyn for as many days as are required to stage the action demanded by the play. Valley Ranch is entirely different from the simpler outfit on Cottonwood Creek, and boasts of every modern improvement. There Geraldine Farrar will have her own electrically lighted log cabin and the remainder of the company will be quartered in tent houses.

Besides Milton Sills and Tom Santschi, together with other members of the company, the cast will be further strengthened by ten champion riders of Wyoming, local celebrities, most of them, because of the accidents they have survived. Their daring exploits are taken as a matter of course. They will also live at Valley Ranch. Geraldine Farrar insists that every member of the company supporting her dice at one great table in the ranch-house.

After the fire scenes are photographed Geraldine Farrar and her associates will forsake Cody for a fifty-mile pilgrimage into the cattle country.

Arrangements have been made with Winthrop Holley Brooks, owner of Valley Ranch, one of the show places of the country, whereby the place is turned over to Goldwyn for as many days as are required to stage the action demanded by the play. Valley Ranch is entirely different from the simpler outfit on Cottonwood Creek, and boasts of every modern improvement. There Geraldine Farrar will have her own electrically lighted log cabin and the remainder of the company will be quartered in tent houses.

Besides Milton Sills and Tom Santschi, together with other members of the company, the cast will be further strengthened by ten champion riders of Wyoming, local celebrities, most of them, because of the accidents they have survived. Their daring exploits are taken as a matter of course. They will also live at Valley Ranch. Geraldine Farrar insists that every member of the company supporting her dice at one great table in the ranch-house.

“Inside the Lines” (Word).

The current release on Word program of the five-reel feature, “Inside the Lines,” with Lewis S. Stone as the star, is still a big box-office winner in the legitimate theatres. A revival of this Broadway success was made in Boston, and, though it had a long run there during its first visit to that city, it is now in its twelfth week. So pronounced is the success it is now meeting with that plans are being formulated for several companies to tour it in the coming season. The timeliness of this picture is best illustrated by the recent disclosures of the activities of German authorities from Wilhelmstrasse.

They spent over thirty million dollars in perfecting an organization to disseminate propaganda in this country by buying up a large number of daily papers scattered throughout the United States.

Inside the Lines” is the best of all the plays shown to date that illustrate the methods of the German Government in insidiously sowing the seed of doubt and discontent to nullify the aims of our Government to bring this war to a successful termination.
Metro Gets Rights to "The Man Who Stayed at Home"

METHO has acquired the American motion picture rights to "The Man Who Stayed at Home," the patriotic drama which has delighted theatre audiences in this country and in England. "The Man Who Stayed at Home" will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger. The identity of those playing the roles of Christopher Brent and Miriam Lee, taken on the New York speaking stage by Albert Brown and Katharine Kaelred, will be announced later. The play completed a long run at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, New York, some few weeks ago. The record of "The Man Who Stayed at Home" has been eventful. It was produced at the Ambassador's theatre, London, where it had a run of two years. It was written by Lochem Worrall and J. E. Harold Terry in collaboration. Under the title of "The White Feather" it had a brief engagement in New York shortly after the beginning of the European war, but war problems were not at that time sufficiently understood in this country and the play was withdrawn.

After America's entry into the great struggle it was produced under its present title by Henry Jewett with the Copley Square Stock Company, in Boston, having the usual run, for a stock company, of thirty weeks. William Moore Patch, managing director of the Fort Pitt Theatre, has recognized the drawing power the play would have to a country awakened and secured the national stage rights, showing the play at his own theatre for seventeen consecutive weeks. Later the play awakened New York and continued its season well into midsummer. The coming season it will be sent on tour throughout the United States. A notable cast will be engaged to interpret the play for the screen, and it will be produced as a multiple-reel feature under the guidance of a director appointed for the purpose. "The Man Who Stayed at Home" will be the eighth patriotic feature production issued by Metro, the others being "To Hell With the Kaiser," starring Lawrence Grant and Olive Tell, which has just completed a successful Broadway run; "Leat We Forget," with the heroine of the Lustiania, Rita Jolivet; "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly; "The Slackers," with Emily Stevens; Mabel Taliesin in "Draft 1917;" "The Legion of Death," starring Edith Storey, and "Her Boy," co-starring Effie Shannon and Niles Welch.

Walsh Spends Six Months Making "The Prussian Cur"

An idea of the thoroughness of R. A. Walsh, the Fox director, may be obtained from the statement of the Fox Film Corporation that Mr. Walsh spent twenty-seven weeks filming "The Prussian Cur," the production which enabled him to complete the most picturesque scenes of the Prussian army system in this country.

When Mr. Walsh began on the production he was faced with a stupendous job. He had to duplicate the United States Senate chamber, the German Embassy at Washington, the Kaiser's Palace at Potsdam and other historical settings which require, not only extensive preparations but also the greatest fidelity to detail. How closely were facts adhered to in this production is shown by the fact that the real furniture which was used in Ambassador von Bernstorff's office in the German Embassy at Washington is used for a setting in "The Prussian Cur."

Select Presents Quartet of Attractions for August

SELECT announces it will release during August four productions. The latest attractions of Clara Kimball Young, Alice Brady, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge are included.

"The Savage Woman," about which so much has already been written, is the Clara Kimball Young production for the month. This picture was originally scheduled to be released at the end of July, but such is the magnitude of this production that it was found impossible to complete and release on time. The picture was presented to the public before the early weeks of August. Produced by Clara Kimball Young and her own company at Hollywood, "The Savage Woman" will undoubtedly take rank as one of the major accomplishments of this star.

Probably the second of the Select releases during August will be "The Death Dance," Alice Brady's next picture. This is a ripping story of New York life in which Miss Brady is seen in the role of a breezy modern girl who determinedly follows a course of clean living and upright conduct in the face of many enemies. Where she is credited to Marie Eve, the photoplay being prepared by Paul West—the last work which this veteran did for the screen until his recent retirement. The cast includes Helen Montrose, H. E. Herbert, Harland Tucker, Clara Doris, Edna Mae Cooper, Lewis Wiloughby, and Jane Reckley.

Many Inquiries Coming on Johnson Travel Pictures

ARRANGEMENTS are now being made through which the Martin Johnson travel pictures, "Among the Canalal Islands of the South Pacific," will be shown as a feature attraction in many of the leading and higher class motion picture houses throughout the country.

That these pictures have struck a popular chord is manifested in the larger audience that has been received by Mr. Johnson not only from the amusement houses, but from educational and scientific institutions as well.

With the view of supplying the latter demand a series of short subjects will be made from part of the 50,000 feet of negative which Mr. Johnson took on his expedition, part of which will be shown at universities and educational institutions, as well as to religious societies showing the missionary work which is now being accomplished in these regions.

Alice Howell Puts on "Hey, Doctor!"

From Julius Stern, the president of the Century Comedy Company, comes the information that Alice Howell is about to appear in another of her characteristic vehicles which has been given the title of "Hey Doctor!" In this burlesque Miss Howell returns to the type of characterization which is peculiarly her own and appears as Rosie Ratte. In the cast supporting her are Russ Powell as Dr. I. O. Lotta, Eddie Barry as the janitor who loves Rosie, Billy Armstrong as Billy the Butcher, Edith, Kelly as Jassband Jennie, and Neal Burnus as her sweetheart.

Keeney Soon to Release Third Subject, "Marriage"

THE Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation has now released two pictures through the William L. Sherry Service, "A Romance of the Underworld" and "Out of the Night," and will shortly release a third, "Marriage." Reports from the Sherry exchanges continue to tell of the success of the Keeney pictures. In many houses they have been drawing larger audiences than any of the popular Charlie Chaplin films, which are the latest of the summer season. All of these Keeney pictures star Catherine Calvert and are directed by James Kimble.

The tentative title of the fourth Keeney picture, "The Girl With a Past," has been handed to the Sherry exchanges by the late Paul Armstrong, who wrote the well-known drama from which the picture is made. "A Romance of the Underworld," is adapted.

Keeney's present plan is to resume production with Miss Calvert early in the fall. No definite announcement has been made as to when he will take up production with Jewel Carmen, who recently signed a contract for an extended term of service with Mr. Keeney. It was understood that Mr. Keeney would begin at once with Miss Carmen were it not for legal entanglements, William Fox claiming her services under a previous contract.

"Marriage," a Keeney release, is of especial interest because it was written by Guy Bolton, who is the author of "Topper," "The Big Gay Canary," "Oh! Lady! Lady!" This is Mr. Bolton's maiden effort for the screen and bids fair to make him popular as a movie fan.

Good Reports on Kenyon Releases

Reports from the various exchanges of the William L. Sherry Service, which is distributing all of the pictures of Doris Kenyon as the head of her own company, have been uniformly good. Among the first of the Kenyon releases, "The Street of Seven Stars" is making a hit with the public. It is a sweet and sentimental story of love and adventure with a few thrilling incidents. The screen adaptation is from the novel of the same name by Robert Rinehart, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post.

The second of the Kenyon pictures, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," is to be released from the Universal exchange. It is the story of twin sisters, one of whom is raised in the social advantages of the Catskills and grows up almost as a wild girl, while the other is reared in luxury in the environment of New York's fast society set. The striking resemblance between the two sisters leads to numerous cases of mistaken identity. Real life courtroom scenes can't tell them apart, and some of the mix-ups are very amusing.

"Bawled Out" (Universal)

Alice Howell in "Bawled Out," a two-reel comedy, is in the latest offering featuring this star which comes from the Century Comedy Company. According to Universal office sources, it is the best Alice Howell comedy released to date. Featuring so popular an aggregation of screen comedians as Eddie Butterworth, Vin Moore and Helen Gibson in support, it is sure to succeed. Universal regards it as being out of the ordiary.
Fox Planning Campaign
For “The Strange Woman”

Plans for an elaborate campaign are maturing in the Fox Film Corporation for the exploitation of “The Strange Woman,” the screen adaptation of William J. Harbuth's famous stage play, which will be one of the early Gladys Brockwell releases under the William Fox Victory Pictures banner.

The purchase of the motion picture rights to this play, stated an official of the Fox Film Corporation this week, is in direct line with the Fox corporation's policy to buy only the best novels and stage plays for picturization by their studios.

“The Strange Woman” in its original version was one of the most successful plays in recent years. It played the season on Broadway and toured the principal cities of the country. It is our purpose to capitalize this appeal. We think “The Strange Woman” is one of the best stories that has ever been put on the screen, and that the film will be well received with it. Miss Brockwell has already begun work at Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of Edward LeSaint, who will undoubtedly be released early in September.

To give the exhibitors of the country the full benefit of this picture, the picture establishment in its stage form we have devised several novel publicity and advertising aids.

“Green Eyes” for Dorothy Dalton.

A picturesque and carefully dramatic story of the Old South is presented in “Green Eyes,” the next Paramount picture starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, which has just been completed at the Eastern studios of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The story is described as a comedy of the training camps, and will be released under the trade name of “Come On In”—for it is apparent from the outset that the picture not only has a slogan, but carries the strong patriotic message as well. “Come on in—the war is fine!”

World’s “The Road to France” is a Romance of Ships

A BRIDGE of ships is The Road to France, declares E. N. Hurley, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, and against the background of present war activities in American shipyards World Pictures announces the picturization of a tense love story bearing the title of “The Road to France” and starring Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greely. This super-special will be released on the regular World program on Sept. 9.

As a fitting foreword to the picture Mr. Hurley appears in the introductory scenes and explains the importance of ships and shipbuilding to the glorious future of our country. The launchings of a large number of ships on July Fourth are shown, together with views of notables who were present, these including Judge E. H. Gary and Mrs. Gary. The latter is seen christening the ship “Liberty” as she slides from the ways.

In the introductory scenes Chairman Hurley says: “Eight months ago the entire working force in the shipbuilding plants of the United States totaled 45,000 men. To-day there are 350,000 men working in the yards and 250,000 cutting timber in the forests and sawmills, besides untold thousands fabricating plates and frames in the steel mills of the country. German efficiency, that was forty years developing, will be answered by us in one day by the bridge of ships that will make ‘The Road to France’.

That this picture will arouse tremendous interest was evidenced by the expressions of appreciation and approbation made by the privileged few who were present at a private showing of the new motion picture, when screened at the private projection room in the home office of World Pictures a few days ago.

The scenic environment of this film embodies the most interesting section of the nation's activities leading to a successful termination of the war world. It shows the evolution of a steel cargo carrier from the launching of the first oiler to the christening of the ship as it takes to the water. Intertwined in the picturization of the construction of the ships is the thrilling patriotic fervor which will strike a responsive chord in the heart of every American. Here is propaganda of a sort that is most earnestly desired by our country. It is a mental tonic that should and no doubt will stimulate every soul who has daughter of “Columbia” to do even bigger things that democracy may survive and make this world of ours a safe place.

Stewart and Gloria Swanson
Triangle Features August 11

The United States-Mexican frontier forms the background of “Cactus Crandall,” the novelized production offering Roy Stewart, and scheduled as the first release on the Triangle program for the week of August 11. A timely production which strikes a patriotic keynote is “Shifting Sands,” the second release for the week, starring Miss Swanson.

“Cactus Crandall” was written by Roy Stewart himself, and he plays the hero, Cactus Bob Crandall, in this production, which is described as a Western thriller. The girl, Helen, is interpreted by Marion Marvin, who makes her first appearance upon the screen in this production.

George Elwood Jenks scenarized this play, and, according to the report, Director Cliff Smith has furnished the production with entirely new sets which picture the environment of the Mexican territory with pictureque reality. Steve Round is the cameraman. Charles T. Day wrote “Shifting Sands,” which offers Gloria Swanson as the second release of August 4. It is described as a story of love and sacrifice in which the heroine finally wins happiness through her patriotism.

Miss Swanson plays the part of an artist, Marcia Grey, who cares for her invalid sister. She is unjustly convicted and sent to prison by a man whose advances she scorned. Upon her release she finds love and happiness. But after her marriage she is again molested by the man who caused her imprisonment. He attempts to force her to betray herself and her country, but the Secret Service interferes, and her former sacrifices are not in vain.

Joe King portrays John Stanford, a rich tenement worker, in love with Marcia. Harvey Clarke, Lillian Langdon, and Arthur Milllett are members of the supporting cast.

This is the first Triangle production directed by Albert Parker, who recently arrived at Culver City. Pliny Horn photographed and Katherine Carr wrote the scenario.

Outing-Chester Shows Beavers.

“A Dam Catastrophe,” seventh of the Outing-Chester travel pictures released by Mutual, displays a colony of beavers in active operation. The busy little animals, all unconscious of the proximity of a cameraman, are shown cutting down trees on the bank of a swift-running stream in the Northern forest, their long, sharp teeth shining in the sunlight as they gnaw into the hard wood.

The close-ups of Mr. and Mrs. Beaver are probably more intimate pictures of these picturesque little folk than have ever been made before. Every hair in their long whiskers can be counted if the spectator desires.

This release constitutes also an intimate touch of the wilderness. The picture portrays forty miles from any human habitation, except those occupied by Tepee Indians, with whom the photographer made his home while stalking the beaver.

Stanton to Make “Eyes of the Soul.”

Having just completed “Why America Will Win,” the great patriotic picture of victory which is based on the life of General Pershing, Richard Stanton will begin work soon on another big production. This picture bears the title of “Eyes of the Soul” and it will be done by an all-star cast.

Outing-Chester Shows Beavers.
"Mickey" Orchestration Made by H. Sylvester Krouse

Follow the announcement that the Mack Sennett production, "Mickey," has been released, and a box office attraction, offered to state and buyers, several sales of foreign territory are reported, including England, Spain, Portugal, and Brazil. Rights to New York have also been secured by Magnet Film Exchange, 71 Bowery, and have been listed, and Jules Burnstein, manager of this exchange, is very enthusiastic over this production, and predicts it will not a few of the best in town in second and third time to see it, and that this picture will prove to be the biggest box office attraction that ever entered a picture motion picture screen.

The music score for "Mickey" is being played by H. Sylvester Krouse, who has written several ballet scores, suits for musical comedies, and has been a concert pianist. He is a representative of the strongest, too, and Mr. Krouse is also arranging a complete piano score so that the music may be heard in the main lobby of a piano and possibly one or two additional instruments will not be handicapped.

"Suspicion" Is Title of Hoffman's First Release

"Suspicion," the first release of M. H. Hoffman since his secession from Foursquare, has been edited, cut and titled, and the first completed print will shortly be ready for viewing. Mr. Hoffman in an interview given last week at Mount Sinai Hospital, "will, of course, speak for itself with the few words that he is to have. It is an advisory to me to judge what I naturally consider to be its many great merits as a production, its position in the picture industry, and I think it is much better than any previous picture." Mr. Bedding chose a powerful theme for his play "Suspicion" is a war-time offering, but there is not a single piece of War stuff in the picture. It is a story of the present day and hour, and many of the scenes are laid in Washington. The picture will, I think, make a world-wide appeal.

"Mr. Bedding and I are old associates in producer work, but I have reserved New York and New England for my own offices. I am confident that by reason of the strength of its story 'Suspicion' will be quite as popular with exhibitors and the public as its predecessor, 'The Letter/' Red in Germany.' The topic of 'Suspicion' is literally in the air, everybody is talking or thinking about it, and it is likely to have a great deal of space to it, and the future of civilization and democracy depend upon the forces and influences which are dealt with in 'Suspicion.' Yet the picture does not preach, it entertains, while it thrills and excites.

"Suspicion" will be probably followed by many other big offerings, but at present I and my force are concentrating upon this picture.

Madame Petrova Finishes
Extensive W. S. S. Tour

On July 25, Madame Oiga Petrova returned to New York, having completed her country-wide tour in the interest of the War Savings Stamp movement. On June 1st she visited twenty-five of the principal cities, as follows: Atlanta, New York, Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Minneapolis, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Duluth, Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Newark, Louisville, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh, in a little more than a month.

The amount, $200,000, which she promised Government officials that she would raise, was actually received, and Hittland figures for the entire tour indicate that the total sales of War Savings and Thrift Stamps on this tour were $200,000.

In each city she appeared in one of the leading motion picture theaters, giving, in addition to a war talk, recitations and a rendition of a patriotic ballad, "Freedom for All Forever," Co-incident with her personal appearance her latest film, "Tempered Steel," was shown. In each place visited she was greeted by enthusiastic crowds, many of them being received by the mayor, other officials, and special military escortors. At some points War Savings and Thrift Stamps, to the number of thousands, were given to boys of 18 and over, and public squares and parks to accommodate the crowds could not gain access to these lances because of the crush she led a parade of the naval squadron.

Madame Petrova's return to New York was timed so as to allow her to view "The Tiger Woman," her fifth special production directed by Ralph Ince, and which will be released in the near future.

Modern Secures New Jersey Rights to Gaumont Topicals

A contract has been closed through Mr. Jans, the New Jersey agent, disposing of the northern New Jersey rights to the Gaumont News and Gaumont Topicals.

Herman F. Jans, president of the Modern Film Company, and also president of the New Jersey Metro Film exchange, recently organized the Modern Film Company for the purpose of handling independent or state rights, separate and apart from the New Jersey Metro organization. All independent attractions hereafter released by a company through the Metro office have been transferred to the new organization. Gaumont News and Graphic releases are the flag productions purchased since the inauguration of the new plan of operation.

Mr. Jans is said to have submitted three of the early issues to five exhibitors in many different localities in his territory, and was guided by their judgment.

Sawyer Secures Several Locations

Arthur H. Sawyer returned to New York this week following a trip to Atlantic City. The purpose of his visit being to survey the possibilities of locations for future productions of "Attractours," the story of which calls for several scenes along the Atlantic coastline, together with a spectacular effect to be staged on the water. Mr. Sawyer reported that he has discovered several ideal scenic locations, and all arrangements whereby the places in question have been secured through option, and will be used exclusively in the initial Ralph Ince production.

August 17, 1918

Will Soon Begin Work on First Anna Case Picture

A NNA CASE, the well known grand opera prima donna and star of the concert stage, will on August 12 begin work in the first production in which she will be featured by the International Film Corporation. This picture was previously announced as being titled "The Golden Hope." However, so many changes have been made in the story that Director Julius Steiger is endeavoring to select a more appropriate title, which will be announced later together with detailed information as to the type of story.

In addition to beauty, Miss Case is said to possess remarkable dramatic ability, and to have achieved success entirely through her own efforts. Possessed of a beautiful voice, her parents unfortunately were not in position to allow her to have it cultivated; so she started on her own initiative and fought her way, rung by rung, up the ladder of fame, being engaged successfully at different times in selling newspapers, driving the station hack in her home town, singing in the church choir, then small concerts, making records for phonographs, etc., of all of which helped to pay for her musical education until, by long, hard, and conscientious work, she reached the goal.

Irving M. Lesser Joins the Navy

Irving M. Lesser, manager of the Los Angeles office of Rol L. Lesser's All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has enlisted in the navy, and Lewis Hyman has been transferred from the San Francisco office to Los Angeles to take Irving Lesser's place.

This necessitated changes in the organization of Mr. Lesser's San Francisco office, so Mr. Carney had been promoted to Mr. Hyman's place, and W. G. Holbom is now in charge of the booking of the official U.S. war films which are being distributed under authority of the State Council of Defense of California.

No Impossible Situation in Gaumont's New Serial

THAT a motion picture serial need not depend on improbable situations or the interjection of magical agents or impossible wonders is claimed to be proven by the success attending the showing of the early episodes of the Gaumont Company's new photo-serial, "The Hand of Vengeance." The interest depends primarily on the story. Starting with a tense situation which merges into another even more dramatic the attention of the spectator is gripped before the first few hundred feet have been screened. Then follows a succession of startling but natural situations—thrilling adventures, exciting dangers, marvelous escapes which are said to be entirely devoid of padding, and which keep the interest at high tension. And even then there will be many persons disappointed because of the fact that the majority of those who took part in this play are now fighting real battles in France, which makes it impossible to show further daring escapades of the delightful adventurer who is featured in this serial.

"The Hand of Vengeance" is said to be a clean and entirely wholesome photo-serial, and one which will delight any class of theatregoers. It is a mystery story, an exciting story, a heart-interest story, a love story, a romance—all in one. And above all it is claimed to hold the interest and suspend, cleverly portrayed by competent actors, and having beautiful photography.

The entire serial is now complete in ten two-reel episodes, artistic posters and publicity books have been prepared, and exhibitors will be able to see it complete before booking.

Install Auto Service to Quicken Shipping

J. A. Koerpel, President of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, Establishes Motor Truck Transportation System Between Seattle and Portland to Overcome Express Delay in Sending Films—Will Open Other Routes if Work of Forwarming Companies Is Not Improved.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE—The Northwest Film Board of Trade is taking up the express problem out of Seattle, and J. A. Koerpel, the president, is arranging for a motor truck express to look after the towns where most trouble is being experienced, viz.; those between Seattle and Portland. If the consolidated express companies do not improve the service to the north and east other motor truck routes will be established along those lines as far north as the Canadian line and at least as far east as the central part of the state. In establishing this motor truck service for the shipment of films, Mr. Koerpel is not making an untired experiment, for he established a similar service between Washington, D. C., and Baltimore when he was stationed in that city as World manager, and it is still being used. To Have National Premier in Seattle. “Salome” featuring Theda Bara, will have its national premier showing in Seattle at the Orpheum theatre on August 3. One of the reasons for the decision to show the big super-feature first in Seattle was the fact that Theda Bara’s last big super-feature, “Cleopatra,” opened in bigger business in Seattle than in any other city considering the length of the engagement.

Rex Enjoys Record-Breaking Business. The middle of summer is not usually thought of by exhibitors as a time for record breaking runs of motion pictures, and John Hamrick, manager of the Rex theatre, Seattle, certainly never thought that the record made with Chaplin’s “Carmen” on the Sunday after a hot July Sunday, but that’s exactly what happened on July 21 and what’s more, Monday’s business continued to smash records. It’s “The Finger of Justice” that’s gone into the wrecking business at the Rex, and it has been continuing all week at such a rate that Mr. Hamrick has arranged to hold it over for another week. In spite of the fact that he has booked it for second and third runs at his two other houses. The lobby display was considered so good by Miss Grace Marbury Sanderson, author-manager of the production, that she has had eight dozen photographs made of it to send the other first run exhibitors throughout the territory. The picture is already booked up to the eighth run in Seattle. In the Washington territory it is booked up tight to October. Miss Sanderson, who has established her Northwest headquarters at 1016 Third avenue, will leave next week to cover Montana.

Metzger Now With Jewel Productions. G. A. Metzger, who has given up the Northwest managership of Universal to accept the general managership of Jewel productions, has sent out letters of farewell, and offering his personal services while in New York to help his exhibitor friends in the Northwest. A similar letter from him was also published in his house organ, “Zeel Stuff,” which is published in the Portland office. Mr. Metzger’s letter was followed shortly by one of greeting from Sol Hauns, who is succeeding him as former chief. Mr. Hauns has for some time been acting as Mr. Metzger’s assistant in the capacity of manager of Bluebird productions in the Northwest.

Pathé Office Now in New Quarters. The Seattle Pathé office was moved this week from its old location in the Central building to the new building just completed for it at 2113 Third avenue.

Exchange Personal. H. B. Wright, formerly an exhibitor and owner of state rights features in British Columbia and other parts of Western Canada, has joined the sales force of the Seattle Select office. Another new name on the list of Select salesmen is that of R. A. Butsler.

J. E. Madsen, who was Mutual’s first manager in Seattle, got a furlough from Camp Lewis the other day and paid his many friends on film row a visit.

J. A. Koerpel, World manager, has just returned from a trip calling on exhibitors in Washington’s Death Valley, where he experienced temperatures which mounted as high as 114 degrees in the shade.

A. G. Kelchhey, booker at the Seattle General office, went into training this week at Camp Lewis, and his place has been taken by L. T. Ruffner, who was shipped in to replace Paramount staff.

Alex Singelow is leaving this week on his first trip through the Washington territory for Klein.

Jack Rantz and His Bride Are Back. Jack Rantz and his bride, who was Miss Virginia Keltner, of the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office, returned to Bremerton this week from their honeymoon in California. Mr. Rantz operates the Rilco and Dream theatres in Bremerton.

—Formerly at 70 Turk Street, the Old Film Center.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Brek Photoplay Supply Company, which succeeded to the business of George Brek and Son in 1918, has moved from the quarters that have long been occupied at 70 Turk street to a handsomely equipped suite of rooms at 355 Golden Gate avenue and Jones street. This store is in a fireproof building erected exclusively for the purpose of the supply companies, and this concern was the first to lease space. It occupies a space twenty- five feet by fifty, both first and second floors, with a full basement, in addition to a mezzanine floor, where the offices are located. A large shop will form part of the equipment, and it is planned to manufacture many specialties for use in connection with projection. TORONTO.—The Regal and Regent people, of Toronto officially known as the Famous Players Film Co., Limited, and the Regent Films, Limited, and the Regent theatre, enjoyed a Sunday outing at Whitby. On July 22, for the purpose of entertaining the several hundred convalescent soldiers in the Whitby hospital, the regal people have arranged a number of shows including the “Blue Laws” of Ontario. They had a big day. Eighty of them made the trip in fifteen automobiles, played and sang, and then returned home feeling both good and sore, the latter state resulting from a number of leg and arm muscles after a strenuous baseball game. A picture show was provided in the theatre of the hospital, the attractions being “My Four Years in Germany” and Chaplin’s “A Dog’s Life.” Seven members of the Regent entertainers also provided the music for the presentation.

The “Film Nine” played “The Cripplers” a scene long known by many, and one that was 42 down to 24 or 5 to 1—we forget which—in favor of the ex-soldiers, despite the fact that J. P. Brown, the Regent Regent interest, officiated as an umpire. Only five innings were played.

Mr. Bickell, manager of the picture show and the stage manager for the vaudeville performance which was also staged, in other words, he worked while the rest played.

The soldiers provided a healthy meal for the troops. It had been known as a “square meal” before the war, practically every employee of the two companies mingled in the most democratic fashion. Announcement was made by Mr. Bickell that they would all move to the Whitby hospital within another few weeks. One of the treats promised for the coming occasion was a recital by the entire “Regent Famous Orchestra” for the soldiers.

Impress Paper Under Special License.

Toronto exchanges report that they are now having no difficulty in importing all the still photographs and display paper for the coming season. A new privilege is required. A short time ago an order-in-council was passed which prohibited the importation of any colour postcards or pictures. For a time the Canadian Customs refused to pass the photos for mov- inger pictures, but the new privilege on the paper and other accessories is coming into the country under special license.

Bailie Does Street Car Advertising.

W. Bailie, of Toronto, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario, has acquired complete control of the Kum Bum theatre, 1912 Dufferin court road, from his old pal. Mr. Bailie has been on a wave company for a one-sheet advertising board on the front of ten trolleys that are run through his neighborhood every ten minutes. In addition to this advertising he distributes 5,000 programmes each week, and also uses 150 window cards in the various stores.

Convert Club Into Picture Theatre.

The Goldwyn theatre at Antigonish, N. S., has been converted into a new and modern moving picture theatre to accommodate 1,100. Associated with Mr. Goldwyn is a prominent local citizen. The theatre is to be known as the New Empire theatre.

Byerle Goes to Kansas City.

Tom Byerle, one of the best known film executives in the country, has departed for another country, namely the United States. Byerle received a tempting offer to head the Famous Players Players branch in Kansas City so he drove out of the Toronto office of the Specialty Press. Tom Byerle, a native of Quebec, was a prominent exchange man of Montreal for a number of years.

Serkowich Commissioned Navy Lieutenant

Prominent Cincinnati Film Man Will Be Attached to Staff of Commodore Eaton—Resigns from His Motion Picture Connections.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First

CINCINNATI.—The definite announcement that H. Serkowich, secretary-treasurer and member of the Chamber of Commerce and of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati circuit, has been commissioned as a lieutenant in the Navy Department, has also been made public.

He has been commissioned as lieutenant, senior grade, and will be attached to the staff of Commodore Eaton, who is inspector of munitions and materials for the navy in the Cincinnati district. This makes it probable that the Lieutenant Serkowich will be kept on duty in or around Cincinnati, especially as it was his work as assistant to a school for ruffian boys and his aid in speeding up the manufacture of navy supplies in this section which brought him this honor.

H. Serkowich is a successful conductor of a volunteer navy recruiting campaign, that brought him more favorable attention. However, his experience in actual sea duty, gained several years ago in the merchant service, as well as his work as a wireless man, may cause him to be assigned to duty on the water, and it was thought that this would be most beneficial to him, as he is required to pass the usual rigid physical and mental examinations for the rank in the navy, without going through all tests with trying colors.

Minerva Theatre Being Remodeled.

The Minerva Theatre on Fifth avenue is the latest downtown theatre to remodel. Work is well under way, Mr. Stewart, the manager, says, and in a few weeks the new and improved house will be ready for inspection and for the summer season.

The theatre will have two entrances and will extend from Fifth avenue to Fourth. The front will have a capacity of approximately 1,000 seats, which is a great improvement over the present capacity of about 600. The new entrance of this house is ideal, being directly across from the Arcade and in the same square with the New Grand.

Mr. Stewart has contracted for the Sherley releases, which he will play a week, commencing with the “Romance of Underworld” and the “Exonerators.”

Avalon Theatre to Open August 1.

The new theatre next to the Hotel Henry, at 127 Fifth avenue, will be opened as the “Avalon” about the first of August, and is the latest addition to the downtown theatres. Mr. Payette has been associated with a number of film concerns for several years, and before joining the army was connected with Goldwyn. He is now a member of the army and has been sent to Camp Humphrys, Va.

O. D. (Nick) Weems, who is one of the foremost film men of the Baltimore and Maryland circuits, has been selected by Mr. Payette as the Baltimore representative of the moving picture men's welfare fund. Mr. Weems was salesman for Mutual, then became Baltimore branch manager for that company. Later on he went with Paramount-Arctura, from which association he now comes to Goldwyn. Mr. Weems is well known, and one of the most popular film men in Baltimore.

Pictures At Camp Purnell.

Depkin a Busy Man.

Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager for the Movietone News of Maryland, is busy with his many interests, is right up to his neck in business these days. He has again taken over the management of the Maryland Theatre Light near Cross street, and for a couple of weeks has been running a daily change of pictures.

On Saturday, July 27, Mr. Depkin took a run down to Atlantic City, N. J., to look over his Anita theatre in that city, and reports that while the season for the well known summer resort has not been a smashing one still he has been making out very well. Mr. Depkin is being run with N. E. Bowden, a Baltimorean, as the house manager.

Schanze Hailed to Court.

Frederick W. Schanze, proprietor of Schanze's theatre, Pennsylvania and North avenues, who had an unsuccessful attempt to have his property acquired by the city, as the same corner, was given a hearing before Justice Brendel in the Northwestern Police Court on a charge of the Child Labor Bureau on a charge of violating the child labor law of Maryland. It was shown that the two boys in question merely hung about the store to make money by acting as errand boys. They were fined in Thrift Stamps. The case was dismissed.

Exhibitors' League to Hold Picnic.

The Maryland Exhibitors' League is now busily making preparations for the holding of a lively picnic on August 10 for all motion picture fans in the Monumental City who care to attend. Frank A. Hornig, president, and Louis A. DeHoff, secretary, met recently in New York to arrange for the appearance at the picnic of about 25 film stars who are to be their guests for the occasion.

The affair is to be held at Monumental Park, and, according to the arrangements now in the hands of Mr. Hornig, it will be informal. Many interesting features in the way of athletic games and old fashioned sports will be provided for the occasion. The Dinner will be served in the park. It will be an all day affair. More than a dozen names of guests for the occasion will be entertained in a true Maryland fashion by the members of the league.

Business Excellent in Galveston.

DALLAS.—The moving picture business is booming at Galveston, Tex., with the construction of shipyards and the use of the Gulf as a major port for United States marines and units of the United States Navy and air national service.

Business had fallen off considerably when the Government war activities commenced, according to the report of the Bell Enterprises, controlling Galveston theatres, which visited Dallas during the week in July. Lack of custom excursions rates on the railroads was the cause of the temporary summer decline in the Galveston theatre attendance.

Huley Entertains Patriotic Bodies.

Two Dallas patriotic societies, the Dallas Home Guard and the Anti-Young Dog Club, are guests of local newspapers during the week of E. H. Huley's Hippodrome theatre to "Pershing's Crusaders," which is the week end feature at the theatre mentioned.

The Dallas Home Guard, five hundred strong, came down to see the picture and cheered the patriotic picture to the echo.

The Anti-Young Dog Clubs are composed of men who once ran down to run down slackers and spreaders of German propaganda. The organization was modeled after a story carried in the Saturday Evening Post, and now the Dallas clubs have a membership of several hundred enthusiasts.

The youngest staged a big street parade carrying patriotic banners and ended the festivities with a full night of a special patriotic performance which they enjoyed vastly. The Old Mill was decked out with flags and the stars and the flags of the allied nations for the occasion.

A novel feature was introduced by Manager Herschel Stewart in securing photographs from the Columbia company and having General Pershing's address to America rendered before each performance. The stunt was productive of much patriotic enthusiasm.

Sol Davis Back from El Paso.

Sol Davis, assistant salesman of the General, in back from El Paso, where he went with John A. Stavos, personal representative of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, to look over conditions in the border country and in New Mexico.

Mr. Davis reports that owing to troop movements from border cities, and El Paso in particular, that business has fallen off. The exhibitors say, however, that such a condition will only be temporary as more soldiers are expected for training. El Paso is out for a canvass which will increase the already large condition.

Authorities Examining Projectors.

Dallas city commissioners, in conjunction with the chief of the fire department, are now interesting themselves during the past few days in various types of motion picture projection equipment.

In particular they have been investigating the reliability of various machines with the idea that they may be safely used in churches, auditoriums, etc., without a fireproof booth. At present every machine must be put up in a metal booth, but it is possible that this ordinance will be amended.

Huley Returns from New York Meeting.

Returning from the First National Exhibitors directors' meeting in New York, E. H. Huley brings back some gratifying news regarding coming releases to First National franchise holders in Texas. In particular he is enthusiastic over the fighting scenes in "I'lly's Fuming Front."

"Smiling" Jimmy Kolly of the General is busy with plans for the establishment of new offices for the General Film Company here. He will move from his quarters at 2017 Commerce street to a two-story building on the near future and expects a formal opening about August 15. The new General office will be a two-story affair and the company now occupies and handsome film exchange quarters in the southwest.

Follows Policy of New York Rivoli.

The new Rivoli theatre of Dallas is the first of the new local houses here to adopt a short reel program. The new program is copying the Rivoli theatre of New York City, and during the last week of July presented the same bill as show at that place house during the last week in June. The short reel program while rather a novelty to Dallas picture fans is proving popular. The opening program was "Sisters of the Golden Circle" and an O. Henry picture, "Faro Nell's Return," both of which have been "The Preacher's Son," a Judge Brown story.

Keeyes Joins Aviation Corps.

A. A. Keeyes, proprietor of the Texas theatre, Quanah, has joined the colors and is now a flying cadet at Love Aviation Field at Dallas. E. Rodriguez, whom he left as manager of his theatre, was here to see him a few days ago.

Texans Exhibitors Visiting Dallas.

Among Texas moving picture exhibitors visiting Dallas during the last week in July were Jake Abrams, Crown theatre, Houston; W. F. Sonneman, Rex and Nickel theatre, Amarillo; R. A. Barnes, Mission theatre, Sulphur Springs; Sam Nantos, Liberty, San Angelo.

Hodkinson Plan Going Big.

James Kelly, of the General Film Company, reports a wonderful response of Texas moving picture exhibitors to the Hodkinson co-operation plan offer. He says that 75 per cent. of the Texas exhibitors will avail themselves of the offer before the end of the summer season. Among those already signing up are J. E. Hegman, Austin; Hugo Plath, Temple; W. R. Swain, Ennis; E. B. Wells; J. F. Green, Cleburne; Fuerz and Belton, Jacksonville; D. F. Prall, Longview; L. E. DeHoff, Marshall; W. J. Lytle, San Antonio; J. Blenden, Amarillo.

During the last week in July five Dallas theatres were showing Hodkinson pictures, these being the Elks, Texas, Imperial, Queen, Bluebird, Hippodrome, Rex and Colonial. Eight Dallas theatres have signed for Hodkinson service.

"A WOMAN'S FOOL"
Universal Special Features Harry Carey in 'Owen Wister Story'
Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A STORY of western type if it is well produced is pleasing to the majority of people. "A Woman's Fool," the Universal five-part adaptation of the Owen Wister story, "Lin MeLean," has its good points and its bad points, the chief among the latter being a lack of good construction. Harry Carey is the featured center of the story and plays attractively in the title role. Mollie Malone is mentioned as the feminine lead, but is not permitted to enter the picture until the fourth reel, which seems rather an oversight on the part of the director. Betty Schade, playing what might be termed the second feminine lead, has the screen almost from the beginning. Others of the cast are M. K. Wilson, Ed Jones, Vester Pegg, William Carroll and Roy Clark.

The story concerns Lin MeLean, a product of the west, who one day collected what was coming to him from the boss and started off for Denver to look around. Before he arrived at Denver, however, he met and fell in love with Katy, a "buisniss" girl who is disinclined to have a husband living and a little son, deserted by both father and mother. In his efforts to replace the husband and also to win love again with a good and beautiful girl. The first woman, following him, breaks in on the family party, causes the young wife to desert, and finally tries to poison herself. The close of the picture finds the happy wife and the child of the other woman. The picture contains some good comedy touches.

"OH! WHAT A DAY"
Jester Issues a New Twede Dan Comedy But It’s a Close House Only.
Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

ON MARQUIS wrote a full column about a man who ran his Ford through the length of Kansas on stomach bitters. Twede Dan shows how a man may run a regular automobile many miles on straight bounce, when gasoline is more expensive than the tangle-foot. "Oh! What a Day" was only a comedy dream, but patrons of Jester comedies will get the full effect of Twede Dan and Babette's mirth-provoking antics the dream notwithstanding and nevertheless. The fun is divided into two sections, as the comedy is divided into reels. In the early scenes Twede Dan and his "pals" are shown motoring toward the seaside, and the last half of the comedy pictures the fun they have when they get to the bathing beach. The idea of a "drunken" automobile is well conveyed, but there are no end of funny outcomes of the motor's " jag." At the seaside the comedy element is exaggerated by chases and "clinchers" in the bath-houses and in the plunge. While it may seem impossible to get new comedy out of an old horse, he starts in to nothing. Intervals Twede Dan has done just this with fine effect. "Oh! What a Day" is a whole lot funnier than a majority of the screen comedies extant and will provoke gales of laughter wherever it may be shown.

"ALL MAN"
Blue Ribbon Vitagraph Number Offers Curious Study of Criminality.
Reviewed by Robert C. McIlvray.

This five-reel Blue Ribbon subject feature Harry Mowry in the role of John Olsen, a workman in whose veins the blood of the Vikings is said to flow. The story was written by Donn Byrne and directed by Paul Scardon.

This is chiefly interesting as a study of criminality, and there is almost too much of this for the average observer, we fear. The leading character, John Olsen, scarcely comes up to the mark as a hero in any sense of the word; his course under temptation from the first reveals nothing but weakness. He once tries to reform, it is true, but at the next breath of threatening trouble he falls in with what may be termed another crime. The character never arouses full sympathy and, in spite of the title, the hero exhibits pitiful weakness and not strength. But the fault is with the plot itself rather than with the character.

Olsen at first has a responsible position in an iron foundry, but is tempted by a socialistic agitator to help blow up the safe. The job is done, but Olsen's leg is broken by the fall of the safe door, and he is taken to the home of Belle Foliot, a woman crook. By the time he recovers they are in love. They plan several thefts together and Olsen is apprehended and sent up for five years. On his release he decides to reform, but as Belle will not do so, he marries a "drowning mill" and takes up farming. The detective who sent him up lets out his secret. His wife, a typical "lady" who has appeared on the scene, saves him from this. Olsen then decides to get a divorce and it is intimated that he and Belle will start life anew.

"DOING THEIR BIT"
The Lee Kiddies Have Responsible Roles in Spy-Plot Full of Thrills.
Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

DIRECTOR KENEAN BIEL, is understood to have written "Doing Their Bit" especially for Fox's "Baby Grands." Such being the case we are led to believe that the author-director considered that such inconsistencies as appear in the presentation of the girl and her role would be overlooked because of the youthfulness of the little ones who undertake many exceedingly mature accomplishments. So be it, then, and, such being the case, "Doing Their Bit" will almost please and satisfy the host of theatergoers who have come to admire these clever children because of their individual and combined artistry.

The story starts in Ireland and finishes off in New York, where the kiddies have come to make their home with a rich uncle who is becoming daily richer through the manufacture of munitions. Two agents of Hun "kultur" are on the ship that bring the little ones here, and Jane is the one to identify the spy who signals to U-boats. The German diplomats make their way into society, play upon the weaknesses of the munition manufacturer and, by the act of stealing the design of an essential piece of machinery by the "Baby Grands."

In the plot are touches of patriotic color drawn through the contrast in the action of two "society" chaps who shirk volunteering, while a rugged Irish youth volunteers to join the army at the outbreak of war. "Society" gets a bad "showing

All the stories presented for screen dramatization were as full of interesting incident and consistent action as "Her Husband's Honor," by Mabel Heikes Justice, the path of the producer would be easy. Thomas Tom-mamato gets a fine opportunity to show what he can do, and takes advantage of it. "THE PRICE OF APPLAUSE"

Triangle Number Features Jack Livingston in Absorbing Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

This is one of the most interesting war pictures recently offered. It follows the adventures of a Village poet whose mother was a German, and who had a strenuous time learning to be a good American. The play, adapted by Doris Schroeder from a story in the Saturday Evening Post by Nina Wilcox Putnam and Norman Jacomson, turns up some valuable character work, and moreover depicts some soul struggles and peculiar mental plights that have had their parallels in real life.

Jack Livingston makes a flesh and blood character out of Karl Le Harron, the Greenwich Village poet who lived upon applause as an orchid subsists upon the nectar of the air. He was a bore, and most of the way through it, his sympathies were with Germany. But applause was to be obtained by siding with America, so he makes a bluff that he will go to France for this country. His friend, Marcelcar, takes him up, and offers to go along. Marcelcar even insists, and Karl finally goes, though he is a coward at heart and really does not want to fight.

There are some weird and realistic scenes on the battle-field at night. The skulking Karl exchanges identification tags with a dead German, and assumes the latter's uniform. He then allows himself to be captured by some American soldiers. Marcelcar, thinking Karl dead, has his poems published, and they make a sensation. The author is shot, and the story is continued. Meanwhile, the war goes on, and eventually the author comes to life again in the estimation of the world and claims the applause due him. It can be seen that the story is a very strong one, and the climax itself is satisfying.

Clare Anderson plays the feminine role and is excellent. At the beginning of the war, the world was aghast over the peace talk in Europe, and the shock of this brings on his mother's death. Dick appeals to the rich and wiser, with every measure of "suite" death, but when this is refused he speci-

Triangle Offering Features Pauline Starke in Crook Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

While Pauline Starke appears as the girl heroine of this story, the principal events really centre more about Dick Browning, the hero of "Alias Mary Brown" from Farguson. The plight of the hero at the beginning is a very interesting one, but in his later career he becomes a crooked 'villain' and falls in with a band of crooks and robbers. The play makes up particularly well in the feminine role, and this rather adds to the unconningering charm of the story.

The offering is one that will get over with almost any audience, but is not notable for any special novelty of presentation or elevation of thought. Even while the hero reforms at the close and returns the stolen goods the feeling remains that this course was not justified.

The story was written by E. Magnus Pedronet, and directed by H. D'Eblu. Others in the cast are Walter Belasco, Dick Rosson, A. N. Millett, Eugene Burr, Albert L. Lee, F. Thompson, and Sidney De Gray.

THE EYES OF JULIA DEEP

Mary Miles Minter is Charming in Pleasant Drama Which Finishes Off with Lively Comedy.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THIRTY reels of engaging drama furnish the basis of two reels of lively comedy that comprises the feature in which Mary Miles Minter appears to fine advantage. The eyes of Miss Minter play a large part in “The Eyes of Julia Deep,” and we have two convincing close-up shots in proof. Julia had "some" eyes.

Miss Minter is refreshingly natural and artistic in her faithful impersonation of the star role. She embodies this typical ideas of what motion picture actresses may best represent—youthful grace and charm, blessed with an intelligent face, rich in expression and the dominating ability to go along about her business of acting for motion pictures just like a regular human being who is both clever and pretty.

It takes three acts to tell the story of the drama, and to get things into five-reel shape there is supplied two rather superuous reels of comedy that stretches credulity without becoming entirely inconsistent. In the comedy reels there are dances, fast food, a family, etc., that is likely to garner laughter as the tribute of most moving picture audiences.

“The Eyes of Julia” rages along at lively pace in the early sections, and to the praise of whoever is responsible Miss Minter gets her spritual and physical self through the completed entertainment, without falling victim to any assault squads or avenging vomics. The entire process of presenting “The Eyes of Julia” leaves a clean and wholesome memory of a pleasing entertainment with Miss Minter’s personal charm the chief of many delightful.

Allen Forrest as Miss Minter’s leading man played a fine and manly part in human fashion, despite his extra allowance of good looks. Lottie Driscoll was particularly effective in the comedy section, and George Periolus was entirely adequate to the requirements.

AMON AND THE ARCHER—This interesting O. Henry picture in two reels shows how wealth ingeniously applied proves a valuable aid to cupid in promoting a love affair. Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres are the featured players. Reviewed at length in our last issue.

THIS WAY OUT (Christie).—A rather amusing comedy featuring Ethel Lynne and Bobby Vernon. The story treats of the return of A,& young wife who is determined upon return her mother to come to settle in her home immediately after she is married.

What do you know about...
The husband, disagreeing with his wife, resorts to extreme measures to ensure his mother-in-law to vacate.

DOING THEIR BIT, Aug. 4.—The Lee Kiddles put it all over a couple of German spies in The Border Legion, which starts its story in Ireland and ends in America where two little waifs find happiness in a little orphanage. The children are called upon to perform some very mature and responsible actions in forward positions and are quite successful. The Baby Grand's are clever kids, who need only proper scenarios to gain play to their confusion. The way in which their Bit will please a majority of screen devotees.

The Seventy-Five Mile Gun (Fox).—Mutt and Jeff cartoon of timely interest, showing how the comic characters con- nived to put out of commission the big guns. They succeed ingeniously to make Parian babies at long distance. The idea is ingeniously worked out, with a connected story. In the end the whole German army is "frustrated" by cheese and beer. This is one of the best of Mutt and Jeff comedies thus far shown.

The Burial Alarm (Fox).—Mutt and Jeff comedy, principally employing scenes in police court where Jeff is on trial for homicide and Mutt is on trial for drunkenness and in so low-legged that he cannot continue his business. The Judge eventually releases them from jail after an inquisition of their own house where all the trouble started $16,000. When the judge himself is shown to be the landlord it sends everyone to prison, on a changed decision, for life. The customary incidents in a comedy court room are called upon to provide the fun. Very good indeed.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

ALL MAN (Vitagraph), Aug. 5.—A five-reel production by Robert Byrne and directed by Paul Scardon. This features Harry Morey and Betty Blythe as unique characters very interesting, but the plot rather disappointing. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

The Path Of Thieves (Vitagraph), Chapter V of "A Fight for Millions." This witnesses the safe landing of Jean after her parachute jump from the cliff into the brine. Maud and her trevels are later carried off by Lawless and Smoky, but they are forced to leave her, owing to close pur- sual by the police. There are very fine Lawless later steals the bible containing the proofs of Jean's birth, and lands with it to a mountain cot in which he is hiding.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

BACK TO THE WOODS (Goldwyn), July 23. A five-reel Mabel Normand produc- tion in which she herself does excellen work, but which provides her an insuffi- cient part. A plot for the pictures was published in last week's issue.

Jester Comedy Company.

OH! WHAT A DAY (Jester Comedy).—Tweedt and Mokan's new silent, intensely amusing comedy, employing some "new stuff" in motorizing and bath- rome and in pictures. This Jester comedy is one of the best of the newer style of entertainments in its class, and should please all devotees of comedies.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

A SUCCESSFUL ADVENTURE, July 15.—This is of the same order of produc- tion, which is in five reels, is due to the delightful personality of the star, May Allard. The story does not lack consistency. The photography is ex- cellent, there are several pretty scenes, and the character work on the part of several members of the cast. Reviewed at length in our last issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE BORDER LEGION (T. Hayes Hunter).—A five part adaptation of Zane Grey's novel of the same name featuring Lillian Gish and Francis X. Bushman. The heroine is not favorized by the camera, and while the story, in which Hobart Bosworth plays a veteran soldier to good advantage, has failed in its dignity, the feminine element has not been satisfactorily presented. The production is a splendid one and a review was published in last week's issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 42.—To a large extent this issue is composed of interest- ing War propaganda, showing American artillery moving up to the bat- tle front, the sending up of an observa- tion balloon, and an artillery corps in action. Novel use of place min- ing methods for recovery of lead fired by infielders. Good effects and practice, and several other timely subjects are pictured.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 41.—Several scenes of the new production at Paris Island, S.C., are shown. There is an un- usual diversity of subjects in this issue, including scenes of Fort Jackson, treating soldiers, Yasuer students training to be nurses, Long Branch horse show, in- cluding letters from the Coast, Men of St. Anthony; and expert life-saver who has but one arm, launching of another in Long Branch, Hins, and California girls in sylvan dances.

A CORIAL ON THE ORONOCO (out- ling-tester).—A full review of this in- teresting British production showing the Picture Educator of our issue of April 13. The trip along the Orinoco river, viewing the jungle, and winding black- granite and into the gold regions of El Callao. Further on we come across the Guarangan tribe, who make hammocks of a fibre obtained from the palm. The Moriche and the Moragbo Indians are pictured.

WHAT WILL FATHER SAY? (Strand).—Cullen Landis and Elizer Field are the principal actors in this issue of the Strand comedies. The plot of the story is consistent and amusing. A young couple marries in secret and travels to the dis- pleasure of the young man's father. One day he decided to visit them in their new home, but upon his return found the newly-weds take advantage of the furnitures of an apartment across the hall. The landlord left a note of for the day. The occupant, return early than she had said, causes a lively skirmish in the replacement of the furniture.

HER HUSBAND'S HONOR (Goodrich). Aug. 4.—This five-reel production featur- ing June Walker and Arthur V. Johnson, is based on an excel- lent story written by Mabel Helges Jus- tice. David Powell plays opposite her, doing good work. Others of the cast are Thomas Tomaninnate and Barbara Allen. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Pathé Exchange, Inc.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, No. 5 (Pathé), Aug. 4.—A five number, full of interesting scenes, showing how convoying transports, a close-up of a British battleship, King George visiting the troops on shipboard, a trip to the lines in Har- ris and an attack on the western front, with tanks in action as well as men.

THE GHOST OF THE RANCHO (Pathé).—A well-executed one-reel com- edy-drama, by Arthur Henry Gooden, fea- turing Bryant Washburn and Rhea.Reviewed at length in last week's issue. California near the Mexican border and contains a combination of humor and thrill, pulling together some fine perfor-

Ride and Gloom (Holom-Pathé).—A successful comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels as a young married couple. Their first experiences after the ceremony on the Pullman car are very laughable. The number is a riot of good fun.

VENEZUELA (Pathé-Post Film), Aug. 15.—Another War subject, this time inter- esting South American country, turns up some real novelties in the way of archi- tecture and dress. The Brown bullet tests, the best travel numbers we have seen recently. The manufacture of pottery makes a good change for the viewers.

FOURTH OF JULY IN FRANCE (Pathé).—Two reels of film showing the splendid manner in which the French Re- public celebrates their national independen- ceg. Scenes in an Alatian village opens the film and comprises the most of the footage. It is rather up with the parade in Paris in which our boys accompanied by French cavalry and In and working in the public squares, took part. A review will be found elsewhere.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE PRICE OF APPLAUSE (Triangle), Aug. 4.—A strong five-reel subject, adapt- ed by Doris Schroeder from a story by Nina Wilcox Putnam and Norman Jacob- son, directed by Thomas H. Infron. The character of the hero, a Greenwich Village poet of German sympathies, is handled with a great deal of dra- ma. The story makes a very unusual, Reviewed at length elsewhere.

ALIAS MARY BROWN (Triangle), Aug. 4.—A five-reel story, dealing with Magnus Ingleton and directed by H D'Eli. This features Pauline Starke and Margaret Storey. The plot concerns a young man who turns thief in order to revenge himself upon the men said to be responsible for the death of his wife. The plot is a rather conventional offering of the crook type, not entirely bad for a comedy presentation. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Universal Film Company.

FOOLS AND FIRES (1-KO), Aug. 7.—A two-reel comedy featuring Eddie Hardy, Eva Novak and James Donnelly. The latter is chief of the fire department and his daugh- ter is besought by three suitors. The chief's house gets on fire and there is some wild and hilarious moments. This follows along familiar lines, but is full of good comic action and should go well.

The Brass Bullet (Universal Special), Aug. 17.—Episode No. 2. After Rosal- ind jumps from Spring Gilbert's yacht to safety, the hero is being pursued by the forces Jack to take her to Pleasure Island, where Homer Joe and Mrs. Strange come to his rescue. Very funny, it will make the inheritance also. A mysterious hand shoots Joy while he is trying to kill Mrs. Strange who/enrages the chief, his wife, this is well cor- ntrived and entertaining.

GIVE HER GAS (Lyson-Moran), Aug. 15.—This laughable automobile comedy will appeal to all who have driven or ridden in "divers." Lee Moran and his fam- ily try to have Eddie and his wife riding in their new car. There are some forceful and won- derful accidents on the trip, which winds up disastrously. This makes a good sub- jection.

A Woman's Fool (Universal Special), Aug. 17.—Hardy Carey plays an attractive role for once in a romantic role in which is an adaptation of the Owen Winter story, "Lim McLean." The picture contains some good adventures and has the construction of the production is at fault. A full review will be found elsewhere.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE BELOVED BLACKMAILER (World- Picture), Aug. 12.—A five-reel subject, directed by O. H. Desmond. Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greesley play the lovers, in a light comedy type of story. From all accounts it is a moderately amusing picture. Reviewed in last week's issue.

On his recovery she joins the gang, and John permits himself to be captured in a moment of danger to save her escape. On his release from prison he decides to go straight, but Belle is not willing to share a hundredweight. He is a colorless dull who deserts her when she learns of his past life, and way is left paved for his legal marriage to Belle, who determines to go straight with "her man."

Advertise it as such, and ask if John really was responsible for his misdeeds or whether it was not society which was to blame. Play up the fact that this story is developed from "Fiddler's Green," a story in the Post Evening Post. Perhaps your book store has bound copies and will be willing to share advertising space with you. For a lobby display get a property or second-hand safe, with a card reading, 'This safe doesn't look much like one of those, but its fall brought two lovely hearts together in All Man.' See how it worked out (date)." Advertise an "All Man" matinee at ten cents, and add that women can enjoy as they are willing to pay fifteen. Cactus arranges to take care of Helen, and the ranger gets Ware out of jail. Cactus shoots the saloon and rescues Helen, taking her to his ranch, but he returns to get into the fight, and Mendoza circles the melee and captures Helen a second time. Once more Cactus comes to the rescue, and this time Mendoza is killed. Back at the ranch again, Cactus finds the steers accounted for, but he is not sorry for what might have been a useless adventure.

Feature Roy Stewart as Cactus Crandall and Marion Marvin as Helen Ware.

Advertising Angles: Play up the fact of the star's authorship in the play, particularly if he is a local favorite. Try, "Did you ever sit on a cactus?" and add that Mendoza did and got Iead poisoning. Make capital of the fact that Cactus has

"LET THE Simplex TWINS BUILD UP YOUR PROFITS"

Far be it from us to claim that projection is the only thing that counts, but——when a mother says "I think my eyes of that child" she says a big mouthful about the preciousness of the eyes.

There is no profit in pleasing the mind with good subjects, the ears with sweet music, the nose with delicate perfume, or the body with comfortable seats, if you undo it all by offending the eyes.

Not only that, but besides keeping people away, you don't save a cent in operating expenses; for it has been abundantly proven that the eyes-soothing projection of the Simplex costs less.

All this gives us plenty of reason for urging you to let the Simplex Twins build up your profits.

A show worth more profits more Simplex Projectors are Profit Protectors.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment. We want an "legalized" censorship of moving pictures.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

Please these slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in a locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

First Year Milestone Passed
By United Theatre Equipment Corporation

WHEN our forefathers planned, and later executed, the formation of the United States of America, many "know-it-alls" predicted disaster and trouble. To-day the U. S. A. stands the peer and leader among the nations of the world, due to the foresight and good judgment of those who have conducted the affairs of this wonderful republic.

The U. S. A. is composed of many units brought under one executive organization. It is an acknowledged fact that concentration of authority and executive power, when good judgment is exercised, brings about ECONOMY and EFFICIENCY.

We are glad to announce that United Theatre Equipment Corporation has passed through its first year's existence with flying colors, notwithstanding the dire predictions by some people.

We have passed through a year of unprecedented difficulties, not only on account of the multitude of details involved, but also on account of war conditions, which we had to face immediately after the formation of this company.

There is not an exhibitor or user of motion picture, electrical and similar apparatus and supplies who has been served by U. T. E. who will not gladly testify that we give 100% service and are 100% efficient.

The experience of those conducting the destiny of U. T. E. has brought about the satisfactory solution of the equipment business, and those exhibitors who take advantage of U. T. E. service will find much relief from annoyance, troubles and delays. Therefore, we are of material assistance in producing best screen results with the least expense.

Lucky is the exhibitor who can feel that, when he places an order for projectors or other equipment, he is done with that order. By this we mean that the moment the order is placed with us the exhibitor has put it UP TO US to produce the desired results, without worry or anxiety on his part.

We overcome all projection difficulties. We investigate all new apparatus and supplies and make thorough tests before offering such goods for sale. This means insurance to you, and we shall continue our careful discrimination, in order that we may always be able to deliver and install the most modern equipment for the projection and exhibition of motion pictures.

With our branches in all important cities where ample stocks of machines and supplies are carried, we are better able to take care of your wants than any other concern as yet established in the motion picture equipment business.

We thank you for past patronage and solicit your future business, which will have the same prompt and careful attention as in the past.

It's A Riot!

With the crazy Kaiser on the run, comes this knock-out comedy by the famous Pat Sullivan—"HOW CHARLIE CAPTURED THE KAISER." The rubber periscope—the elastic imperial mustache—the punctured Boche—the sausage cat—the Boche army of fat heads and sauerkrauts—and scores of other punches will set your town on end with laughter. Nothing like it on the market. It's distinctly an exclusive novelty that will go over big. IT'S A UNIVERSAL SPECIAL. Special Posters—You'll have to act quick. Believing that a great injustice has been done to the Essanay Company as well as yourselves by the Trade Paper advertising of one of your competitors in connection with the release of Charley Chaplin in "TRIPLE TROUBLE" I want to state actual facts in connection with the engagement of the picture at the Castle Theatre.

The Castle Theatre, ever since its opening, has been an exclusive first run house; we cater to the very best patronage in Chicago, consequently endeavor to use careful judgment in the selection of our program.

Never in the history of this theatre have we played anything but first run films.

I booked "TRIPLE TROUBLE" after witnessing a private screening and my judgment in its being a satisfactory box-office attraction in every way has been proven by the receipts.

The picture was booked originally for one week but owing to the very excellent business, and because of popular request, we have held it over for a second week's run, which is the first time this has been done in the history of the Castle Theatre.

"TRIPLE TROUBLE" PLAYED TO THE BIGGEST BUSINESS EVER DONE AT THE CASTLE THEATRE despite unusually hot weather conditions and gave complete satisfaction to my audiences. They thoroughly enjoyed it and the laughs were just as great as I have ever heard with any of Chaplin's pictures.

I am a stickler for fair play and in order that exhibitors operating first class picture houses may not be misled into believing that "TRIPLE TROUBLE" is not a brand new film in every sense of the word, never before shown - that it will give complete satisfaction to their audiences - that it will prove just as big a money getter as any of the Chaplins, I am going on record in this manner.

You have my permission to use this letter in any way you see fit and if further proof is desired you are at liberty to refer exhibitors direct to me.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) M.J. Weil
Manager, CASTLE AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

IN the year beginning September 1st, next, New York’s three great moving pictures theatres—The Rivoli, The Strand and The Rialto—will show 121 Paramount or Artcraft Pictures. That leaves 35 features to be chosen from the productions of all the rest of the industry put together.

“What do I care?” asks Lawrence, Kansas.

By the features in those three theatres, New York judges the moving picture industry—decides whether moving pictures are worth while, whether they are essential, whether they are wholesome entertainmen't, whether they should be supported or ignored.

“New York’s opinion means nothing in my young life,” declares Lawrence, Kansas.

S. L. Rothapfel and Harold Edel, in choosing programs for their theatres, have a tremendous responsibility on their shoulders. In those three theatres, a few blocks apart, is decided the destiny of the entire motion picture industry. What they show may not affect your theatre immediately, but, Lawrence, Kansas, these two men have the power to tear down or to build up the industry of which you are a part.

“Oh, say, that’s going too strong,” protests Lawrence, Kansas.

It is, is it? Read on, Lawrence, Kansas.

Suppose The Rivoli, The Strand and The Rialto showed questionable pictures or merely stupid pictures. It is these theatres that the greatest writers in the country attend. In these seats you find U. S. Senators and Representatives, club women, public officials from all parts of America—men and women who write and speak and make laws and whose influence is nation wide.

Within a very few weeks the influence of bad pictures would be felt in Washington, in Kansas City, in San Francisco. These people would be asking pertinent questions. The motion picture would be on the carpet everywhere.

Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Edel realize their responsibilities. They have performed splendid service for the industry in keeping before the eyes, not only of New Yorkers, but of the hundreds of thousands of visitors from all over the country, the very best in motion pictures.

Perhaps, Lawrence, Kansas, you do profit directly by this. Doubtless your leading merchant, in his trips to New York, has attended these theatres and has returned with new respect for you and your theatre. Doubtless he has boasted about you, telling his friends, "Why, they show the same pictures in Lawrence that they do in New York, and they show them just about as soon, too."

But that is incidental.

The big thing is that what New York and its visitors think about motion pictures, is vital to every person connected with the industry. The leaders of America attend The Rivoli, The Strand and The Rialto and for the good of all of us they must see the best the industry affords.

Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Edel, who realize the importance of their theatres to the industry, have chosen 121 Paramount or Artcraft Pictures for the year to come.

The way they rate the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's productions is significant.

These men believe that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has earned the right to be the predominant representative of the motion picture industry in New York in the year to come.

Do you think they are right, Lawrence, Kansas? Of course you do. And you'll be guided to no small degree by what they do.

Thanks, Lawrence, Kansas, for your attention.

The Strand in New York is "Besieged by crowds that stand for hours and stretch down the street and around the corner," the New York World says.

The New York Tribune says, "When we left the Strand the line which forms to the left had stretched down as far as 45th Street [The Strand is between 47th and 48th Streets] but we intend to get up bright and early some morning soon and go to see 'The Great Love' again. Everyone should see it once for the story and once for the acting and the accompanying music."

"The Great Love" means capacity business for a longer run than you ever gave any other picture.

by

Produced under the personal supervision of

ROBERT BRUNTON

Directed by Ernest Warde

In the role of Kirk Marden, J. Warren Kerrigan will be seen as the son of an American railroad magnate; the embodiment of the American spirit to fight for right—and fight fair. In the Orient he meets William Real and befriends him. Upon their return to America he learns that his father is about to be ruined by a business rival. How he steals not only the papers that had been obtained through intrigue, but also the heart of a beautiful girl, presents Mr. Kerrigan in one of the most virile roles that he has ever interpreted.

Announcing the release of the Lillian Walker Series of eight happy pictures thru the W.W. Hodkinson Corp.

EXACTING in its requirements of quality, and unyielding in its adherence to the highest principles of business, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is setting new standards in the motion picture field that will make for the soundest development of every factor within the industry.

In announcing the release of the Lillian Walker series of pictures through this organization, therefore the producers of these pictures believe that they are not only offering exhibitors an additional guarantee of the consistent merit of their productions, but that they are associating themselves with a business force that is vital to the best interests of exhibitors.

Lillian Walker Pictures Corp.

Hodkinson Service to have new star series because Hodkinson Service offers the only channel of distribution for the producer that assures him an equitable, fair and just presentation to the exhibitor and which satisfies the demand of the industry for a closer relationship between exhibitor and producer.

Mr. Lester Park, President of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, says: "When we made our initial announcement in the trade press we had not decided on our distribution arrangements, but, after careful investigation, I was entirely satisfied that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation offered the only distribution that would bring our product to the exhibitors on the fair and equitable basis we desire, and still allow us to be in the quality company our product deserves."

"I have been one of the few producers who has worked with the exhibitor toward solving his problems, and I believe that by placing the Lillian Walker Productions as I have I am helping to build a structure that will be mutually beneficial for all."

The above is one reason why Lillian Walker Productions will be released as part of Hodkinson Service.

Over There and Over Here

Over there the valiant men of France, Great Britain, Italy, and the United States are wearing down the resistance of the Hun and forcing back his fighting line toward the Rhine.

Over here men, women and children watch with feverish interest the papers day by day to see what the last few hours have brought forth over there. Every item of news, each picture that bears upon the endless battle, is scanned with eager eyes.

You can show them what the motion picture camera is seeing over there—first hand, fascinating information, if you show

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 8th
That's What They All Say—
"one of the screen's finest comedians"

HAROLD LLOYD

the star of the one reel Rolin comedies bearing his name.

Mr Lane, the photoplay critic of the Boston Evening Record, is to be complimented upon the soundness of his judgment.

By TAMAR LANE

Everyone is quite ready and willing to pin new words of praise on those who have already won success and distinction, but there is not the same promptness and effort to praise those who have not yet won a certain degree of fame. With this thought in view we take our Oliver in hand to smear a few honeyed words on the career and personality of Harold Lloyd, one of the screen's finest com-dians, and one whom we think some day take his place alongside Chaplin and Arbuckle as a wholesale producer of laughs.

Even today Harold Lloyd is making comedies which compare favorably with those of Chaplin and Arbuckle.
Lloyd is featured in one reel comedies which are made by the Rolin company and distributed through Pathe. His films are always laughable and consistently good. We have yet to see a poor one. Lloyd is a young man, apparently about 25 and if managed properly will some day make a big name for himself in the screen world.
He is original in his work and imitates no one either in make up or in acting. He is unique as a slapstek comedian for the reason that he wears absolutely no trick make-up or character clothes. His only comedy accessory being a pair of horn-rimmed glasses.
ROLL OF HONOR
THE NAME OF EVERY THEATRE WHICH EXHIBITS
PERSHING'S CRUSADERS
THE FIRST U. S. OFFICIAL WAR FEATURE

will be published in this Roll and the United States Government Division of Films will present a handsome "Victory Scene Pledge" to its proprietors to be used for lobby display and as a memento of their patriotic action.

Names preceded by an asterisk (*) are the week's supply of newcomers on the Honor Roll.

If you have contracted for "Pershing's Crusaders," the name of your theatre positively will appear in this Roll, in the time of or even three weeks afterward, as it takes time to pass the contracts through various departments.

DON'T BLAME CHAPLIN FOR THIS FILM CRIME

"Triple Trouble" Is Afnicious Patch Quilt of Ancient Slapstick Reels.

BY W. K. HOLLANDER.

If, as it is often repeated, picture entertainment eventually will fall by the wayside, a discardedfad once universally hailed, such films as "Triple Trouble" will hasten the catastrophe. Alluding Charlie Chaplin's name with this picture not only does the comedian a gross injustice, but is ruinous to the industry as well. It is not a Chaplin specialty such as the public has been in the habit of getting, though the comedian is there, having been drugged in unwillingly and unwittingly.

The comedian's friends will rise in indignation against the subject and the few who cannot be entertained by his clowning will pity his plight. It is obviously a pieced together affair, clumsily connected by silly subtitles, aiming to give it timeliness and patriotic flavor.

COLLECTION OF OLD SLAPSTICK STUFF.

If one cares to dissect carefully, fragments of two or more separate slapstick comedies will be detected in one of which Chaplin participated, while Leo White, who frequently gave visualization to the excitable French count in Chaplin and other comedies, is considerably in evidence elsewhere.

The writer saw "Triple Trouble" at the Castle theater Sunday afternoon—and almost wept. A few persons laughed at some of the comedian's antics, probably because they thought they were expected to do so by the management and mayhap out of respect to the comedian himself.

POOR CHARLIE ISN'T TO BLAME.

There are a few situations showing Chaplin in uncomfortable circumstances: one or two others disclose him in desperate combat against odds, while the main substance—in which he does not participate, tells of some fiendish German plot to get possession of an American formula for a powerful explosive. The whole thing is worse than those wacky old Keystone slapstick.

It looks as if Essanay gathered together the shavings of several old pictures and manufactured "Triple Trouble." So don't blame Chaplin. He had nothing to do with it. He will be along shortly in a film of his own making called "Shoulder Arms."

Hammerstein Was Right—Caruso Did It

Impresario Years Ago Had Said the Day Would Come When the Great Tenor Would Sing on the Stage of the Manhattan Opera House, but It So Happened the Artist Was Performing for the Camera—and for Zukor

SCAR HAMMERSTEIN said it—and in fullness of time it came to pass. Enrico Caruso, the movie actor with billion dollar lungs, sang on the stage of the Manhattan Opera House. But it was not the cigar maker impresario that brought about this consummation on Friday, August 9, between the hours of 10 A.M. and late in the afternoon.

Adolph Zukor, the Hammerstein of motion pictures, was the cause of Caruso’s appearance at the Manhattan. All the scenes for his forthcoming Arturo were with the exception of a few long shots and close-ups at Paiglacci, the grand opera clown—had been taken at Fort Lee. There remained but the opera house interiors, with stage settings and full-dress audience to be completed when Caruso drove up in his Henry Ford to the stage door of the Manhattan.

The “fringe of Chelsea” was there to greet him—somehow gossip carries fast and Caruso’s invasion of the district traveled as speedily as bad news. But his coming was good news to the denizens of “Ate” and “Nint” avenue, where the early “Thirties” run across town to get their feet into the North River. Lads and lasses of all ages—even unto the gray-haired stage manager of the great Hammerstein opera (just as Hammerstein had once said he would) the stage door of the Manhattan Opera House. And Chelsea villagers gazed and gossiped.

Inside, the audience had assembled. The center aisle of the parquet was the line upon which Assistant Director Scully’s forces rested. The name of the G. M. might more properly be Scurry—for he was everywhere. Some two hundred lads had gathered with the idea of having turned their opportunity into profit and their figures into evening clothes to make the audience that should applaud the mighty Caruso when he had stuck a long knife into his antagonist at the climax of the second undertaking.

Audience Is Picturesquely Impressive.

Viewed from the stage the audience was picturesquely impressive. Swiftly moving, whiskers like diplomat’s beard when they have their pictures taken; elderly ladies with green and purple feathers in their hair that swayed and swung as they fanned and fanned, and fanned some more; males of the type of Shubert chorus men who laughed in baby voice and clapped their hands with sympathetic sweetness when they got the signal; girls of various ages and complexities with chest measurements that looked like a one-sheet behind it; and Caruso, whose head and torso are so constructed that the gathering of the clans at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Director Jose held one end of a long rope, as he stood close to the brace of cameramen, in the centre of the middle aisle, well back under the curve of the balcony. Assistant Director Scurry—he simply must be called that—held the other end as he ran back and forth close to the brass rail that separated him from perdition in the orchestra pit. To the right the rope settled tautly in its flight:

“Fill these seats inside the rope, if you please,” said Mr. Scurry.

The brave and bold and fair and forty and near-males of the audience settled into the seats—alternating a male and a female with the precision of the dark brown and light yellow sardines we observe when the tin is first opened. Then the rope swung to the left and settled again; the rest of the audience sat themselves down in even formation—here a male, then a female, then a Shubert chorus man, then another woman, who made a white, shiny spot in the group like a small section of a bathroom wall.

“Inside the rope, or out of the picture,” called Mr. Scurry. The audience formed an inverted V, narrow at the head of the aisle and broadening out as things got closer to Caruso. In two ways that meant the backs of their chairs the ladies looked as comfortable as though they were on the street—where it was twice as hot and twice as sticky.

On the stage the little "theatre" where things were soon to begin had been set in "Thriller" with a wood scene back and surrounding it back to full stage and over to right center. The villagers in radiant dress had assembled. They were a gorgeous lot of men and women—probably fifty chorus people who knew "Pagliacci" backward and sideways.

Caruso Mooches on Sweatily With Whitened Face.

There was an outburst of vocal commotion; two short, but ringing blares of melody (exactly as though the good ship Enrico were blowing its whistle in warning of approach) and Caruso—the billion-dollar vocalist—was in the very midst of the party. It would be a lie to say that he danced on joyously. What he seemed to be doing was to swing it—exactly as the man with the rope—trick people into believing that he was whitened like the clown we had heard use the Caruso lungs at the Metropolitan. His garb was of same style—but not white, a la opera. It was lemon color, but the big black rossettes roamed down the front and the duffly collar surrounded his neck and obstructed the view of Enrico’s real elevation, as to his head.

He was in good humor, despite the temptations temperature is he picked up a little girl who was of the chorus, and jouced her above his head. There was a word of greeting for men and women of the chorus; a slap on the shoulder for a young man in white trousers and blue flannel coat.

“We shall essay to engage him in conversation as per regular interviewers who write ‘feature stuff’ for the family page.”

When he seemed content and happy with just a second to himself we advanced and gave the two sheets Caruso, and his colors and was about to pass on. But we thwarted him.

“Which would you rather be, give your chance, Mr. Caruso,” we said, as the great Enrico started to smile behind his whitening. “An opera singer, a movie star or a phonograph record?”

“Yes, exceeding warm,” said he, smiling. “I am not compelled to do this, but I do it to keep myself employed. Lack of occupation makes me distressingly nervous—but I like the money very much indeed.”

We had looked, once, into Charley Chaplin’s million dollar smile and liked it. To gaze into Caruso’s billion dollar smile is even more so. For he is just as genial as Chaplin—although he doesn’t speak with an English accent. Perhaps the difference between a million and a billion had its effect—but, somehow we liked Caruso (in our fickle way) just as well as we liked Chaplin.

Celebrated Welkin Resounds to Call of “Camera.”

“The picture is all finito except these scenes,” said Caruso. “We have been working hard in Fort Lee. There will be several hours of work here today and I shall be glad when we have concluded.”

(The point we wish to make right here is: Despite all temptation, despite the heat, the opportunity and consent of the governed, we have refrained from interpreting this Caruso interview in malignant and emasculated Italian dialect. Decorations, we believe, are worn out on the left lapel of the coat just above the handkerchief pocket.)

The preparations for "shooting" having been completed, the work was begun on the scene. On the set of the street (to which we walked and which I am sure was agreed upon by everyone), the scene was rehearsed and then Jobse took it over and the camera men took the celebrated walk.

The "Pagliacci" chorus burst into song, as the ten-piece orchestra struck up the measure. Caruso, in his donkey-shay, driven by a pretty girl, who was also a precious place to which we managed to get through, wheeled into the camera position near the footlights. His voice arose in a manner that was both comic and effective. He beat the bass drum—and otherwise "ballyhooed" for the show that was soon to take place somewhere on the stage.

"Mark down the cameras, boys," said Director Jose, and the grinding machines moved on to the stage for a close-up. In this Caruso sang just a little bit louder than for the long-shot.

The scene shifted to the interior of the little theatre—first of the thimble, bandbox and little theatre movement that was well under way before the Government needed for war purposes. Director Jose had shifted again to the head of the aisle. Caruso here took the direction of matters into his own hands and had the voice doing all this, had shown his to-be admiration and how to make the entire dollar lungs (or to try, at least)—and then "Camera" rang once more through the thralldom of the upper regions of one of Oscar Hammerstein's monuments.

Caruso gives every indication of presenting great possibilities for moneymaking. Somebody is going to get rich. It may be the exhibitors who will do so. They are the craftsmen of the industry. It may be Italy's and not Caruso's, but it is likely to be Italy's, after all.

"The Great Love" Acclaimed by Crowds
New York's Strand Holds Capacity Audiences During First Two Days of Griffith's Latest Production

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH has scored again. "The Great Love" has been acclaimed by capacity business at New York's Strand during its run. It may be said of its current week's showing. Sunday, of course, was sure to bring the usual holiday crowds to the Strand—with a fine, cool day to gratify the swelterers—but the true test came Monday when the regular admission patrons came out. It was a fine showing.

Before 7 o'clock Monday evening—following reported big business all day—the house was comfortably filled and capacity soon resulted. The standing room was occupied for the first show and again, after 9 o'clock, when the bill again continued, every seat was occupied and standing space was pre-empted.

As an indication of what the picture may be expected to do throughout the week—and as an index to its probable favor throughout the country—it may be said that "The Great Love" delighted spectators and held every observer in the thralldom of suspense. Director Griffith's personal popularity was evidenced in a spontaneous outburst of applause when the director passed before the camera, in a flash of a second, unannounced and entirely unexpected, as one of the "crowd" then under the eye of the machine during a vista of Parisian street life. "The Great Love" gives every indication of marking another immensely popular appeal to the picture going public. Elsewhere the work has been technically judged for this issue, and it only remains for this report to register the united endorsement of public approval for this latest of the master-craftsmen's handiworks.

Exposition Will Be Held in October
At Gathering Held in Office of National Association Space Contracts for $24,000 Are Reported

THERE is going to be a motion picture exposition in New York in October. This was definitely settled at a meeting of representatives of companies which have contracted for space held Monday at the offices of the National Association. The meeting was presided over by William L. Sherrill, a director of the Motion Picture, Extension Company, in the absence of President William A. Brady.

The meeting was called at the request of the board of directors of the Exposition Company, which desired it advisable that the companies which had contracted for space for the October show learn of the plans which are under way to hold a big motion picture Liberty Loan rally in the week of October 5-13 which will include also the bands. This affair will be the biggest affair of its kind ever held by the industry.

It was reported at the meeting that twenty companies had actually signed up contracts amounting to about $24,000 and that meetings of other companies were being held in connection with the meeting when it was unanimously voted to proceed with the plans as originally outlined.

The following companies have contracted for space: Vitagraph, Pathé, Anonymous, Strand, World, Precision Machine Company, Nicholas Power, National Carbon, Edison Lamp Works, General Electric, National Lamp Works, Argus Lamp and Appliance, American Coin Register, World Film, Bray, WPA, Mardon, Lasky, Metro, Frohman Amusement, Goldwyn and Select.

The officials of some of these companies who were in attendance at this meeting declared their intention of increasing their space holding and of securing space contracts from other companies which are not now represented.

"Stolen Orders" Sold for 20 Countries
Indications that Sun Will Never Set on William A. Brady's Production of Diplomatic Intrigue

TWO of the most interesting sales of foreign rights that have been recorded in some time are announced in connection with William A. Brady's screen story of diplomatic intrigue, "Stolen Orders." Through W. H. Seely, representing Robertson, Cole & Co., a sale has been closed covering the rights to "Stolen Orders" for the English and German languages.

This means that the Brady picture will not only shortly be shown in England, Ireland and Wales, but as well in India, Burma, Ceylon, Straits Settlements and South Africa. Prints will be turned over to Robertson, Cole & Co., in New York, and it is the confident expectation of that concern that "Stolen Orders" before long will be thrilling thousands in the far places and the near.

Another significant and important sale recently closed is that whereby Harry G. Kosch, acting for John Olsen & Co., purchased the rights for "Stolen Orders" for France, Morocco, Tripoli, Algiers, Egypt, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Jutland and Panama and the countries of South America.

With the feature showing simultaneously in the territories purchased it can be said of the Brady picture that, like the British Empire, the sun never sets on it.

Following its recent remarkably successful runs in legitimate theatres in New York and Washington, the Brady picture has just played a week of excellent business at the Shubert Theatre, Boston.

BRAY STUDIOS AIDING GOVERNMENT
Bray Studios, Inc., producers of Paramount Bray Pictographs, who from the first days of the entrance of the United States into the war have been engaged in film production for various Government bureaus, recently established the Bray Auxiliary Printing and Photographic Company, which is intended to demonstrate the operation of the many complicated devices with which a modern army wades war. These films are employed by the War College for instruction purposes in training camps and have met with great success.

JOSEPH COUFAL RECEIVING CONGRATULATIONS
The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Coufal were agreeably surprised to receive an attractive "pink" announcement of the arrival on August 8 of a baby daughter to grace the home and to be showered with congratulations.

According to the latest news, both the baby and Mrs. Coufal are doing finely, and Joe, who is a member of the United States Equipment Company, is greeting everybody with the smile that won't come off.

WILL GENTZ JOINS DRAMATIC MIRROR
Will T. Gentz, prominently identified for years with the press and with foremost enterprises in theatrical and music circles, has been requested by the organization to become associate editor of the Dramatic Mirror. Mr. Gentz set in motion a national publicity campaign in behalf of "Salome," a big screen spectacle announced for early presentation, while with Fox.
Los Angeles War Service Members Parade

Ahorse and Afloat and on Floats Men and Women of the California Studios Stage Brilliant Pageant and March Past Cheering Throng

in Celebration of the Victories of American and Allied Armies

The street pageant and parade given by the Motion Picture War Service Association on the night of July 31 to celebrate the victories of America and the Allies in France, and to welcome and open the Allied War Exposition Park, was one of the most brilliant and spectacular pageants ever staged in Southern California. Practically all of the motion picture people in Los Angeles had a part in the great jubilee. The parade formed at Seventh and Hope streets, marched over to Broadway, up Broadway to First, over First to Spring, and then down Spring to Ninth street, where it disbanded.

The entire route of the parade was a blaze of lights, a medley of music and vocal applause and enthusiasm. Multitudes of people packed the streets.

Douglas Fairbanks, riding on a big horse and wearing a big white hat and a big wide smile, was grand marshal and led the parade.

Mary Pickford, stepping along at the side of David Wark Griffith, walked the entire distance.

Lois Weber, at the head of the Studio Girls, each wearing a robe and cape of white, a white colonial hat and a sash of blue and red, made the old town rock with applause.

There were soldiers and sailors by the platoon and by the battalion. The boys from Fort McArthur, the boys from San Pedro, the boys from the submarine base, the balloon school—fine upstanding fellows, fit crusaders for Pershing, every lad of them—and the Lasky Home Guards with Major Cecil B. De Mille at their head, furnished the military atmosphere.

And bands! One from Fort McArthur that was a little parade all by itself. One hundred and five pieces there were to that band! And the Naval Reserve Band, the band from the Soldiers Home, the Letter Carriers, the Firemen’s, the Elks, the Eagles, the Knights of Pythias, the Salvation Army, the Fifes and Drums Corps, and the Scotch Bagpipers, two lots of them, each with a lad as tall as a step-ladder doing the drum major act, or whatever it is that the boss of a bagpipe band does.

There were directors by the dozen, directors on horseback, directors on foot; high salaried experts and moguls of the films using shank’s mare as a mode of locomotion and shouting themselves hoarse as they went along.

Helen Keller Marches Between Two Little Girls.

Helen Keller, who is in Los Angeles to make an educational film, blind to the lights, deaf to the music, but strong in patriotism, clapsed hands with two little girls and marched bravely along.

There were twelve floats in the line of march—such floats as only the artistic talent of the studios could be expected to turn out.

Astra studios, representing Portugal, was the first, and behind this float marched the Kaiser, the Crown Prince and Von Ludendorff in chains.

The Griffith studio’s float portrayed Victory, with Helen Werner as the symbolic figure.

The Thomas H. Ince plant had Japan, with a number of native Japanese dressed as ancient warriors. Modern soldiers marched alongside the float, which was drawn by eight horses.

The Fox studio’s was Belgium, with Gladys Brockwell typifying the stricken nation.

The Vitagraph float represented the spirit of Canada and showed the triumphant lions of the Dominion.

Triumph depicted the spirit of Italy, with Ahna Rubens as Italy and Barney Sherry as Columbus.

Mack Sennett’s float, England, was a reproduction of the heavy English field pieces, and belched forth shots and smoke at intervals.

Scotland’s Float Shows a 42-Centimetre German Gun.

The Robert Brunton studios had a reproduction of a captured German 42-centimetre howitzer. The float represented Scotland, and Bessie Barriscale was the central figure. Little Mary June Irving, wearing a Red Cross costume, was also on the float.

William S. Hart’s float represented Serbia, with Josephine, Howard as Serbia.

Lasky’s typified the United States, with Edna Mae Cooper as Columbia. There were soldiers and sailors, all kinds of war workers and two Red Cross nurses on the float.

The Metro float represented Cuba, and had two symbolic figures in the persons of Anna Q. Nilsson as Liberty and Eileen Hume as Cuba.

The monster pageant was arranged under the direction of S. E. V. Taylor, representing D. W. Griffith, chairman of the Motion Picture War Relief Association.

The Allied War Trophy Exhibition opened at Exposition Park the next day, August 1, and at twelve o’clock on that day another monster parade of soldiers, sailors, bands and exhibitions of war relics, including the original British war tank Britannia, marched through the streets of the city.

Mary Pickford was again a central figure, representing the City as Miss Los Angeles. She was presented by the Government with a service flag containing 14,000 stars.

Bernard H. Dyas, Los Angeles manager of the War Exhibit, made a public acknowledgment of the work done by the motion picture industry.

"In the interests of the Chambers of Commerce of Los Angeles, and all Southern California," he said, "I desire to express my appreciation and theirs of the great work done by the motion picture industry. The Allied War Exhibit is a patriotic affair, and as usual the motion picture people responded. Their parade was donated without any solicitation on our part."

R. W. Priest Forms Brokerage Company
The Film Market, Inc., Will Handle Productions for Independent Picture Makers.

Robert W. Priest, who has become well known in the motion picture industry during the past five years through his activity, enterprise and energy in the exploitation and in the purchase and sale of special feature productions, has organized a unique enterprise under the name of "The Film Market, Inc." under the laws of the State of New York, with offices at 403 Times Building, New York.

This corporation is designed to furnish a reliable and financially responsible channel through which independent producers may market their productions to the best advantage with every assurance that they will be efficiently exploited; and, on the other hand, a medium for the purchase of pictures by buyers for all territories throughout the world, putting them in touch with all available features that are to be had, thereby bringing independent producers and American and foreign buyers in contact under conditions of the fullest advantage to both.

For four years Mr. Priest has made a special study of the production and sale of features and their exploitation, and possesses information of great practical value in this connection. This information includes all the statistics that can possibly have any bearing on the probable earning power of a picture in any specific territory throughout the world and facts and figures in relation to the production, sale and exploitation of big specials in the past, which have never before been collated.

Film Market Has Wide Powers.

The Film Market, Inc., has extraordinarily wide power under its articles of incorporation, which give it authority not only to act as a buying or selling agent, but also the right to finance productions and to do everything required in connection with distribution and exploitation, either as principal or agent.

Mr. Priest, who is a theatrical manager of many years experience, began his connection with the moving picture industry as manager for the Gaumont Company and Lee Shubert in 1913, exploiting the Capitol, Suez and Those Nights Pictures. Since then he has been constantly engaged in exploiting various subjects for the principal producing and distributing companies. From the time he started in the business Mr. Priest has kept a detailed record of his work, which record now covers 700 typewritten pages and affords an answer to almost every problem of producing and marketing and enables Mr. Priest to speak with authority.

Hodkinson to Release Walker Pictures
Addition to Service of Park Productions Will Complete Distributor's Plans of One Picture a Week.

With the addition to its service of Lillian Walker Productions the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation makes good its recent statement that it would release one picture a week commencing September 1st. This announcement, following on the heels of the addition of Jesse D. Hamilton productions, makes five sections of Hodkinson Service.

In addition to the new series of eight Lillian Walker productions, Hodkinson Service consists of J. Warren Kerrigan in Hampton pictures; Anita King in Ranch House pictures; Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum and Henry B. Walthall in Paralta Plays; and the Douglas Natural Color films, the first production of which is "Cupid Angling" with Ruth Roland.

Lester Park, president of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, has been an exhibitor, and his brother, Byron Park, is at present at the head of a co-operative motion picture organization of exhibitors in Utah.

In referring to the Hodkinson's new enterprise, W. W. Hodkinson stated: "The coincidence of Mr. Park's ideals with mine would seem to offer conclusive proof that there is something different and essentially right in the principles of my organization."

"The Embezzlement of Riches" will be the first release, scheduled for September 23. Louis K. Anspear is responsible for the story, which is nearing completion at the Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle.

Just What Is Supply of Screen Stories
Serber Points Out There Are A Hundred Thousand Foreign Plays as Well as Novels and Short Stuff.

After seeing the mass of photoplays presented day after day in the motion picture theatres and looking at the poor releases of the different companies, one wonders how long will it be before the supply of material for screen entertainment becomes exhausted," says Charles Serber, scenario editor of World Pictures.

"In Reginald Clancey's 'Stage Cyclopaedia' there is mention made of over fifty thousand English plays. The French drama includes over twenty-seven thousand plays. Spain, Italy and the rest of the continent have given us nearly twenty-five thousand. And from Russia, the country that produces in the great mass of dramatic literature less than 50 per cent are adaptable for motion picture purposes.

We have also as a source of supply the current magazines and newspapers. In addition to the short stories and articles which appear in these publications we are bound to pick and cull because they include in many instances the same situations that give the photoplay its punch. There is one thing we must bear in mind, however, in this connection, of course, our opportunity to make a picture, entirely original in every way, will be an isolated production. There will creep in features something that either reminds us of a picture we have seen or a situation that has been used over and over again.

"The number of stories that daily come to the scenario editors passes all belief. From the length and breadth of this land are writers who are making valiant efforts to break into the ranks of photoplays. Let us encourage the best of these, to encourage the complacent editors to encourage them. For it is from such sources that we will in the future have to depend for stories that have the elements of originality. After all, the best people in this country are being more and more marked with commonplace ideas."

Nat Rothstein Tries Out Gas Sedan
Usually Truthful Advertising Man Goes After Real Recreative Change in Machine He Can Lie In.

LOADING his own car, the Ford, into his own tanks to sufferings Nat Rothstein set forth upon vacation from 1000 Broadway without telling anybody where he was going. For several weeks Mr. Rothstein has been getting in touch with the New York Ford dealers and advertising manager for Universal preaches the "high" the year round and to get a stock of advertisements compiled in advance, plus his weekly routine, kept this bend-for-work at the office for several weeks.

The Rothstein car is a sedan. Those who own Fords will know what is meant by the term sedan as applied to motor cars. Generally speaking sedans have hitherto been changed over into small electric machines with a place to lie in. It is said that Nat's truthful advertising hitherto is fifteen weeks of the year is so exacting upon his temperamental qualities that he must seek relief of a sedan to lie in during this vacation.

The motor in question was the prize car displayed on the floor of Grand Central Palace during the Automobile Show last January. After the crowd had finished walking all over it, and trying out the seats and cabins, Mr. Rothstein had it furnished and is now proving that it is a practical car and not strictly a show piece.

Greer to Distribute Ford Weekly.

Simeon B. Greer, formally president of the Greer and Herz Exchange in Chicago, has disposed of his interests in that concern, as announced in the Chicago Daily News, to Mr. Greer, and has incorporated the Greer Distribution Corporation in the State of New York to handle the national distribution of the Ford Weekly. Permanent headquarters have been established in the Vanderbilt Avenue Building, 51 East Forty-second Street, New York.
Quimby Strong for Exhibitor Advertising

Pathe Sales Manager Sums Up Observations of Countryside Tour and Advises Showmen to Encourage Newspaper Editors to Print Motion Picture News in Place of Declining Sporting Material

F. C. QUIMBY, sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has recently returned from a visit to twenty-two of the Pathe exchanges in the United States. During his extensive journey Mr. Quimby discovered that in a number of cities the leading dailies are discontinuing their sports pages and are devoting much of this space to motion pictures.

"In one instance Mr. Keist, managing editor of the Dallas Times Herald," says Mr. Quimby, "stated that he had been devoting one page a day for years to sports and that he never received any advertising in return from ball clubs or sporting goods houses. He says he finds his readers are much interested in motion picture stories that make good reading. On the other hand, by boosting the motion picture theatres in Dallas he receives some revenue, whereas in boosting sports there was no revenue."

"In Seattle Jensen and Von Herberg and James Clemmer have been using big space in the Seattle Times for years and have found it profitable in running from quarter page to full page ads every day. The Seattle Times has reciprocated by giving the motion picture theatre in Seattle one of the best Sunday motion picture sections in the United States. The people in Seattle look forward to receiving their Sunday Seattle Times with as much pleasure as any special magazine. It is well got up, attractive, has snappy stories, is well illustrated, and the make-up of the display ads are well done."

"The same situation exists in Portland with the Portland Oregonian and Journal where William Parker of the Majestic Theatre and Mr. Parkert and the interests are conducting the same progressive publicity campaign."

"San Francisco is fast going to the front with publicity for motion pictures. Gene Roth with his beautiful new Castro with the biggest screen in the city and the largest liberal space in the San Francisco Examiner. Syd Grauman of Los Angeles states that, although his theatre is well out of the beaten path, coupling up his new house with big display space in Los Angeles papers had made it possible for him to do most phenomenal business. This is also true of Miller's, Quinn's and Tally's, who have all been very consistent users of display space."

New Orleans Overlooks Advertising Possibilities.

"In New Orleans Mr. Thatcher of the Times Picayune says he used to use a lot of display advertising, but he was not able to make the theatre interests there understand the possibilities of newspaper publicity. Mr. Neumeyer, business manager of the New Orleans Item, made the statement that last month in the United States to get off to a good start on newspaper publicity, and this should not be so, as in New Orleans we have some of the most progressive exhibitors in the United States. Mr. Saenger showed me through his beautiful Strand theatre. He is doing everything in a big way in New Orleans with the exception that he should use more display space in the New Orleans paper. He has everything to back up."

"Mr. Thatcher of the Picayune says Mr. Saenger only spends around $50 a week to present a million dollar show. This may be a little exaggerated, but I am positive if Mr. Saenger would use a little display even at the New Orleans Item and Picayune he would find these two papers more than willing to donate a liberal amount of space to readers and pictures and that although he is doing a good business and is the highest paid of the theatres in New Orleans paper more his business would be materially increased."

Predicts Further Increase of Exhibitor Advertising.

"Statistics show that for the six months ending June there was 30 per cent. more display space used throughout the United States by motion picture theatres than the six months ending December, 1917. In the six months ending July, 1919, we will see another increase of 25 to 30 per cent. over the six months ending June, 1918.

"Exhibitors all over the United States never had had more of an opportunity than at the present time to get in touch with their newspapers and urge the discontinuance of the sport page, to be replaced by a good attractive motion picture department. All distributing companies would be more than willing to supply these newspapers with good snappy stories and photographs. Branch managers everywhere would be instructed to personally co-operate with the newspapers in supplying them with all the material and information possible."

"Right at this particular time when sporting news is so scarce and on account of a great many professional sportsmen having drained the rivers from which newspapers keep up the sporting page. Therefore, exhibitors everywhere, branch managers and the industry as a whole should take advantage of this opportunity to impress upon newspapers throughout the nation the great importance of devoting their sport page to the motion picture industry and they will find that the industry as a whole and the exhibitors will be willing to reciprocate in every way possible."
Checking Up the "Slackers" in Ohio
Sam Bullock's Publicity Committee Puts It Up Strong to Theatre Owners in the Cleveland District.

W. ORCUTT, one of the publicity committee of the League and the A. E. A. for the Cleveland district, Sam Bullock, always forceful and definite when he has something to say, writes us a letter accompanying several suggestions to the exhibitors of the Cleveland district on war work which show how they propose to check up the picture theatres in that section. Mr. Bullock's letter is worth reading:

Cleveland, O., Aug. 7, 1918.

I note with interest the feverish preparations that are being made for various "drives" in the movies to help "Kick Hell out of the Kaiser." I believe that the Motion Picture Screen Pledge Certificates and the "documents" are going to be offered to managers to stimulate them to help the government in its "kick." I say to hell with the manager who needs a "go-gaw" of any kind, especially since he and his employees are now beneficiaries under Provest Marshal Crowder's ruling. If the growing casualty lists will not stimulate him he should be drafted at once. If too old, his place should be closed and he interned as a "slacker." There are plenty of slacker managers in strong pro-German locations who do not care how many "Victoria Secretaries" are distributed. When you talk about the BUSINESS by offending no one.

As an active officer in organization matters here in Ohio, I have concrete evidence of this, so much so that after considerable correspondence with Messrs. Fortinjohn and Reimbergh, w.o., in Cleveland, have evolved a plan to make every manager in Ohio "tie the line for the boys over there"—to make it unanimous on all matters emanating from Messrs. Reinbusch and the Industry's representatives. Non-members uncontrolled by League and A. E. A. are not required to co-operate.

Co-operation with the M. P. L. and kindred organizations will make for 100 per cent. efficiency where "non-gaw" will stimulate box-office patronage. We believe no slacker will need paper "Iron Crosses.

In Ohio, the "Cleveland Plan" was sent out to all exhibitors and exchange men in Franked United States envelopes.

SAM BULLOCK,
Secretary Local No. 1, P. E. U. O. A., National Director A. E. A.

"War Matinees" for Returned Soldiers
Cromelin Discusses Possibilities of War-time Innovation Adopted by Exhibitors in Great Britain.

PAUL H. CROMELIN, president of Inter-Ocean Film, and a recent visitor in this country, was of the opinion that the "war matinee" in British cinemas to which wounded soldiers are invited minus charge will eventually be seen in America. The British exhibitor, Mr. Cromelin found, had worked out the plan of publicizing the fact that will make more than balanced the few seats given away.

"It has been the English picture men's great chance to combat censorship faddists and other enemies of the screen," says Mr. Cromelin. "There is sure no reason why American can't make this ever progressive, will want to seize this same opportunity.

"In most English military hospitals the convalescing patients are allowed out from two to six o'clock in the afternoon. The matinee show of the neighboring exhibitor is wide open to the soldier. The latter knows exactly the treat he is in for." A doctor who asked a thrice-wounded Tommy how he expected to spend his first afternoon in Blighty was nonchalantly told: 'At the pictures, sir, of course." It is easy to see why the films hasten Tommy's recovery. Congressional rules are permitting its use as its returning doughboys. They will hold the balance of political power even as the G. A. R. did after the Civil War. They will smash censor tyrants and compel Sunday opening—if we win the war. What is the American theatre man going to do about it? I can do nothing better than remind the American exhibitor that two salient facts stand out as the result of the British war picture public good fortune. And the other, 'in time of war prepare for—peace.' England is showing Motion Picture America its great opportunity.

How Bookings Help in the Trophy Race

To Date Nearly Fifteen Hundred Patriotic Motion Picture Managers Have Booked "Pershing’s Crusaders," and There Are Still Three Weeks Before the Contest Closes—Do Your Bit, Let Your Patrons See This Picture

CENTERED on this page you will find the first tabulation of the bookings made for "Pershing’s Crusaders." This is not the standing of the various contestants for the six-foot bronze trophy offered by the Moving Picture World for the most intensive bookings of this the first of the series offered by the United States Government, through its Committee on Public Information, Division of Films. It does not give the percentages of the various exchanges. It merely recapitulates the bookings recorded to date, which is, of course, ten days earlier than the published date. For that matter, there is still a full three weeks for pulling up the record.

The State Committees on Defense in North Dakota, Michigan, and Arizona, have sent in the figures to the arrangement with the First National Exhibitor’s Circuit to handle all film publications of the Creel committee, and no reports from them are as yet available, but it will be remembered that Sol Lesser of the box and who has already announced his intention of getting that prize away from everyone else, and it is to be presumed that all three are hustling.

There are some mighty encouraging figures in the report, and some few that do not look so good. The film has been shown only once in the state of Hawaii,化工 a total of but three bookings for that territory, and Mississippi and Louisiana have but four bookings between them.

Surely there must be something the matter with the figures!

On the other hand, look at Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming, which have gone ahead. They had fifty-three bookings as the Cree in the hole when the figures were first published. They did almost half of that in the next week, or more than half the last week. They scored a total of 150. That’s a gain of 50, and the entire state of New York had made over 100. So if the bookings of equaling those figures, but you keep your eye on Carey Wilson. He may have worn a fuzzy green hat that when that caterpillar headgear was popular, but if doing the "Legge over his salesmen is going to have an effect we shall not have to pay express charges on that trophy—we’ll send it over by the first week and all will go along to see that it gets there safely. It’s a pretty big trophy and we have a half-portion office boy.

Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office, writes: "Illinois will come very near coping that trophy. We are going to get ‘Pershing’s Crusaders’ into Illinois as close to 100 per cent. as any living ‘man power’ can possibly get it. I am traveling everywhere by automobile and there are few water tanks I do not visit."

He does not say he is traveling on the water wagon, but from his fondness for the tanks it would seem that his is the line. He’s got a look at the table. Nineteen last week and only nine for the last report. That doesn’t look so good, but then the mails are all shot to pieces. Weiss will do to keep a spare eye on.

Floyd Brown, of Indianapolis, announced that he was out for better than 100 per cent. bookings. J. M. Jacobs and H. C. Knox are hustling. The bookings for this week register 14 with 12 the week before—and they are still going up like a copper stock that Tom Lawson is advertising. Seventy-six does not look so good, but there is still time.

That same total of 76 is announced by Douglas Hawley, of the Texas-Arkansas headquarters. But he got only 12 this week and 17 the week before. But then, it’s easy to miss train connections on those Texas roads, and next week may show a different story.

F. V. Fisher, of Seattle, and C. H. Feldman and A. C. Arthur, his aides-de-camp, are getting their stride. Only 6 and 1 for the second week with 17 for a third which show off 15 in one week. That’s the right way to climb.

General Flynn, of Philadelphia, came up to the hundred mark with the aid of W. J. Heenan and Lieutenants Manseil, Tolman, Smiley and Van Dyke. They have the aid of the marines in Philadelphia, and Flynn is not going to sit back in his chair and take a man-sized breath until he can add a percentage mark to that.

C. E. Holah, of Des Moines, who announced that we might as well send him the trophy now as a few weeks from now, has hit upon a capital scheme. He gets the managers who have already played the film to write broader and more popular success. That sort of a report beats anything the salesmen can say, and we’re passing his tip along. The film has made money—and something better than money—wherever it has played. His figures were 72 to start off with. He added 19 the first week and 31 last week. That’s going some! That ties the Colorado, and he’s got the film 6 behind the Eastern Pennsylvania high water mark.

Four of the nine bookings credited to Kentucky have a lot to offer. That’s small fry, but it is a sign that the Goldberg hustler gets the Government’s idea. They want everyone to see it, not just a few in the big towns. That’s why we offer a special trophy for intensive work.

This is not an ordinary film. It’s Government work. It is the message of a nation to its people, and the manager of a house who does not show this film is not a 100 per cent. American. Perhaps he has never done business with the First National before, but he is not a First National production. It is a Government document, and the man who cannot, at the end of the drive, display his lobby one of the beautiful Victory Screen Pledges given by the Division of Films of the United States Government, to every exhibitor who books in this subject, is helping the Kaiser. That may sound a bit strong, but that is just what it amounts to. Nothing will check the effect of this propaganda talk more than the knowledge that will bring greater cheer to the true American. Last week we offered a cut of this diploma, but no cut can do justice to the original. It is genuinely artistic and it means a lot to any man. Get one of the certificates now. Don't wait until public opinion compels you to book in these features. Lead your patrons and don't make them force you to do your duty.

I'm warning you that it's going to cost you anything. If you work it right you can make a real clean-up and a greater gain in prestige that will resolve itself into money in the long run. It's not a sacrifice to which you are being urged. You are merely being invited to make money. That's what you are running a threat for, isn't it?

"Crashing Through to Berlin" Opens

Naysayers of the pre-release in the early papers, large space employed in the Sunday issues and an uncommon amount of billingpost had a visible effect upon the neighborhood of Broadway, at Forty-first street, Sunday evening, August 11, when the Universal enlarged upon its opportunities for exhibiting purposes and gave the first public showing of "Crashing Through to Berlin." Before 8 o'clock the line of would-be ticket-purchasers extended down Forty-first street, and until after the entertainment started this line kept alive and insisted with evidence of desire to see this latest offering of war's by-product.

All the seats taken and standing room pre-empted to the limit the prelim to the main attraction started with an audience ready to applaud anything and everything. Six or eight reels of assorted "stimulants" preceded "Crashing Through to Berlin." These included, "Miracles in Mud," "Industrial," a song rendered from a stage box, and some tableaux interludes that all had a large element of "kind applause" in their composition.

This being the first showing of the film, there being no other advertising for an hour, there still remained vigor to enliven the principal offering—but the "edge" was dulled by the introductory films, while better showmanship would have insured the large number of patents on the "big show." Nevertheless there was enthusiasm and applause running all through the showing of "Crashing Through to Berlin"—with abundant evidence that everybody hoped the ticket selling title would speedily be made good.

The sub-titles were numerous and fulsome, titles in a vast majority of instances remaining on view far in excess of the time devoted to "shots" of the film referred to. This, of itself, is accounted for in the necessity of maintaining some sort of continuity in making entertainment out of what seemed to be extracts from news weeklies in the guise of a motion picture.

Putting together these vistas of events in many lands, assembling them in something approaching historic sequence and forming the scores of brief "shots" in support of long titles has been accomplished with credit to Mr. Alphonse C. Verity, whose names are displayed along with the main title. These names lead with Carl Lacmull, who "personally directed" the offerings; a Mr. Whipple, who edited, and Jack Cohn, who produced the completed subject. Again, there is credit given for organizing what, as a fact, a pictorial history of the world war (in its high lights and essential details) almost up to date.

Opening with "shots" at the funeral of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his consort the series of sub-titles and "shots" go on with the multiplicity of historic events that have so filled the past four years with momentous undertakings. France, Russia, and England spring to arms; the "aspects of invasion," the truth that is the Hun treachery, are visualized. The Kaiser and his clueless son are shown; Von Hindenburg and many other leaders in Germany's assault upon civilization are pictured—and the audience evidenced great patience in modifying its signs of emotion to an amazing degree. These master Huns were viewed during a silence that was emphasized by the outburst of patriotic fervor always bestowed upon the next segment of "shots." There were sobs mixed with cheers.

Practically every angle of the progress the war has made in four years was pictured on the screen in brief "shots"; the disclosures were, in fact, a pictorial card-index of events that have to do with the history of the war; this "map into the ring"—and then came the real, big, demonstrations of patriotic fervor. Toward the end of the showing came pictures registering the development of aerial forces; the Zeppelin raids, and pictures of these dead vaults; aerial plane flights and inspiring sights in "stunts" and battle formations that will thrill every beholder. At one time there were as many as fifteen "birds" in the air, flying in alignment, V-shaping their course exactly as wild geese wing their way northward in early spring.

Big U. B. O. Booking of Red Cross Film

Albee and Murdock Co-operate with General in Giving Patriotic Subject 2200 Showings.

At one stroke the successful American Red Cross Film entitled "The Fourth of July in Paris" has been assured of immediate country-wide showing in the most popular vaudeville houses in the most important cities.

The lively interest E. F. Albee and John Murdock, of the United Booking Offices, in all that appertains to the American Red Cross and to the patriotic and humanitarian motives behind the organization, has been demonstrated in theatres which are served with material by this great booking concern will show the Red Cross film as part of their program. In cooperation with the General Film Company, which is distributing the picture for the American Red Cross, Messrs. Albee and Murdock have promptly closed a broadcasting contract. This means a time of 2,000 days or so. It is not believed any such extensive booking of a one-reel film has been made before.

A pre-release run of one week at the Rivoli theatre in New York demonstrated, through the applause and cheers of the audiences and the enthusiastic comments of the New York daily newspapers, that this touching little patriotic film was an ideal offering for any theatre in the country. Reflecting credit upon the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, which secured and brought over the film, it covers an international appeal, and was projected in an extremely effective manner. The graphic reproduction of the first victorious troops from Chateau-Thierry marching in Paris at the initial observance of our Fourth of July by the French republic was such an emotional subject that a "Historic Fourth of July in Paris" will be filling its time in all of the U. B. O. houses about the week of August 19.

Rogers Registers All In, Not Fatigued

After Climbing Palisades Follies Favorite Repudiates Director's Instructions—Knows Something About Lovemaking, Too.

ORK is progressing rapidly at Goldwyn's Fort Lee studios and at various nearby locations on "Laughing Bill Hyde," Rex Beach's powerful story of "the man who needed two identities to flourish and die." The production is making into a motion picture for release under the Goldwyn star series plan. With good weather the production should be completed in another ten days or two weeks, whichever, according to directors, is the most important. Mr. Hyder, who has the same role in the picture, is ready to admit that all is not movie gold that glitters. For nearly two weeks he has labored like a Hercules, working days in the picture while climbing at the Amsterdam theatres. Two days he spent climbing up and down the Palisades, most of the time carrying in his arms the inarticulate figure of an actor representing his penitentiary pal, with whom he had escaped to lands and hours.

"Register fatigue!" shouted Director Hobart Henley as the perspiring and out-of-breath Rogers reached the top rock of a towering cliff.

"All right," retorted the cowboy: "I don't have to pretend if I don't want to, do I?"

Later Rogers was called upon to jump to Boonton, N. J., for work on location. There he had his first chance to make love for the cameras—and to say that he did it would be gilding the lily. Any man with four years' experience in the "Follies" to his credit admittedly is a past master at the art. Anna Lehr has the role opposite him, that of an Alaskan Indian girl in the picture.

LEXINGTON SUNDAY CASES AT STANDSTILL.

The Lexington Sunday moving picture cases are at a standstill just now, and will not be resumed until the hearing on August 15. In the meantime the theatres are operating the same as usual and paying little if any attention to the added material that the members of the Laymen's Committee is securing to be used against them.
Ohioans Get Together on Sunday Shows

Sixty-four Towns Are Reported Closed on Sabbath and Committee Is Created to Act in Situation.

EXHIBITORS and exchange men from all sections of Ohio gathered in Columbus Thursday, August 1, to attend the second meeting of The Ohio State Screen League. This organization was formed the early part of June for the purpose of enlisting the aid and co-operation of all Ohio exhibitors in obtaining favorable Sunday picture show legislation.

The result of the first meeting was the discovery of how vitally the exhibitors of Ohio are affected by the Sunday closing law. While it was known that several towns had been forced to close up on Sunday, through pressure brought to bear by the ministerial powers of the towns, it was not known until a full report was made to the officers of the Ohio State Screen League that Sunday pictures have been banned in 64 cities of Ohio. In this list there are many prominent towns of large population. This indicates that it is only a matter of time until the blow will be aimed against Sunday pictures in the big cities of the state.

This practically includes all of the cities south of Columbus with the exception of Columbus, Cincinnati, Dayton, Springfield, Hamilton, Bellefonte and Belleaire.

Following the announcement of the extent to which the Sunday closing of moving pictures had been carried in Ohio it was agreed at the recent meeting to invest full power of action in the hands of the executive committee, so as to get prompt and efficient action in obtaining a change in the present legislative measures which forbids Sunday pictures while sanctioning the Sunday baseball.

The executive committee consists of John W. Weinig, Cincinnati; C. W. Cline, Akron; Harry W. Kress, Piqua; Joseph Pearlstein, Toledo, and Zach Smith, Bryan. This committee will act in conjunction with the officers of the organization, Henry H. Lustig, president, and Fred Desbeg, secretary.

Ontario Association to Publish Book
Will Contain Pictures of Members and Their Theatres as Well as Records.

THE Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario proposes to issue a “White Book” to describe its activities and prospects, as well as plans for the coming year. Every member of the association is going to get his name and face in the book, with a brief summary of his record in the theatre business.

Illustrations of all theatres owned or controlled by members of the association are also to be published. The album will also include a number of paid advertisements from exchanges, newspapers, supply houses and other concerns. This business will pay for the book, it is expected. The work is in the hands of Secretary Thomas Scott of the association, whose office is located in the association’s club quarters at 141 Yonge street, Toronto.

Louisville Theatremen to Aid Soldiers
PhotoPlay Association, Co-operating with Service Board, to Provide 900 Admissions Weekly.

Nine of the leading theatres of Louisville, constituting the downtown members of the Louisville PhotoPlay Association, are co-operating with the Louisville War Camp Community Service Board in order that soldiers at Camp Taylor who haven’t the money can get to see pictures free of charge. At the suggestion of the War Camp Service Board the following theatres have agreed to give fifty tickets to each Saturday performance and a like number to the Sunday performances, making a total of 900 free admissions weekly to the boys in khaki, the members of the organization readily agreeing when the plan was put up to them by President Louis J. Dittmar.

This list includes the Strand, Mary Anderson, Majestic, Alamo, Walnut, Rex, Casino, Orpheum and Star theatres. The tickets will be distributed through the Soldier’s Club, the Community Service office and company commanders. This plan has been carried out very successfully in other cities, in some cases the theatres turning over the entire seating capacity at certain shows to the soldiers.

The War Community Service Board will keep a record of the men securing tickets so that there will not be too much duplication and so that everyone will get a fair deal. The first trial of the plan was put into effect on Saturday, August 3. Local theatre managers claim that a few tickets more would make it possible to better handle the hot weather, and that they are glad to be able to do something for the boys at the camp.

Detroit Concentrates on Exchanges.

It looks as if the new film building at 63 East Elizabeth street, Detroit, will soon house every film concern in the city except the Dawn Masterplay Company, in the Owen Building. Already Metro has moved there, occupying ground floor space, and it is understood Triangle has signed a lease for one of the ground floor stores and that the Madison Film Exchange at 73 Broadway has also decided to move there within the next thirty days. This will make 90 per cent. of the Detroit film companies situated in the same building, which will be of great convenience to exhibitors and anybody doing business with the film exchanges. The newest firms to establish agencies in the film building are the William L. Sherry service on the second floor, the Educational Film Distributing Corporation on the sixth floor and a representative for the American Film Corporation on the third floor at the Pathe exchange.
Rogers Has Had Wide Business Training
Becomes Manager of Pathe’s Second Largest Office in America After Experience of Less Than Two Years.

THE story of F. B. Rogers, manager of the Chicago office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be read with more than ordinary interest by young men in the film business who have determined to work their way up. It will show that a good education, followed by business training in other branches of industry, is an important aid to success; that good health, with its great driving power, is an indispensable aid to success in business life.

Mr. Rogers is from Missouri. This fact will probably convey the impression that he is cautious. I believe he is, and, moreover, I believe that he must be shown things before he takes them confidently in his mind. He is from Kansas City, Mo., a city I like well, where he was born about forty years ago. He took a full course in the public schools of the city and was graduated from High School, after which he took a two-year course in Bunker Hill Military Academy, at Bunker Hill, in Southern Illinois.

This academy training evidently gave him a liking for the strenuous life, for he at once engaged in cattle-ranch business and spent four years on the range in Texas. There he added to his rugged health. Then he took up the livestock commission business in his home city and Chicago for several years, after which he became special representative for the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, handling contracts for private wires, Morris circuits, etc., for two years. Next he engaged in the wholesale cottonseed, meal and feed business, in the sales department, for a successful run of three years.

It will be seen that in all these occupations Mr. Rogers had been developing his resourcefulness as a salesman. At this point in his career he made up his mind to enter the film business.

In February, 1917, he was appointed special representative to Essanay’s sales department for the handling of Max Linder comedies in Illinois and sections of Michigan and Iowa. This was his first work in the film business, and his great success is still remembered, although the quality of Linder’s comedy had greatly waned because of his sickness. Rogers filled the position for four months when he was transferred to George Kleine’s office, where he handled V-L-S-E subjects for some time.

He next became assistant manager of the Standard Film Corporation’s Chicago office, under R. O. Proctor, and the latter as manager in November, 1917. In April, 1918, Mr. Rogers became assistant manager of the Chicago office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., under Mr. Proctor, and when the latter was promoted to the position of division manager for the Middle West Mr. Rogers succeeded him as manager of the Chicago office. That was about three months ago, and, in the interim, Mr. Rogers has proved himself both successful and popular.

Mr. Rogers stands high in the estimation of exhibitors in Chicago and tributary territory, and this is directly due to his straightforward business methods and square dealing.

I know these things because Mr. Rogers married Miss Edith Emory, of his home city, an old schoolmate. They have one child, aged 11.

“Bob” McKnight Says He Feels Lonely
Read His Letter from “Over There” and Sit Right Down and Write Him a Breezy Reply.

OB” McKNIght, who was press agent with the American Film Company for some time before enlisting in the aviation service, about a year ago, has written to a friend in this city from “Somewhere in France.” He is now a second lieutenant in the air service “over there.” His letter bears the date of July 13, but was not received until the week of August 7.

The following paragraphs will be read with interest by his many friends, and it is hoped that all of them will comply with his request to write to him, as he is hungry for news from home:

“As you know I graduated from the Champagne Field on November 3 and sailed from New York as a member of the Fourteenth Foreign Detachment, arriving in France early in December. We sat around here awaiting training until nearly the first of May. (You see I have risen from the rank of a cadet to that of a flying ace.)

“Then, one day, I flew with the French and met an American pilot. He wanted to see me, so I took him on a short flight and he fired his machine gun at me. He was amazed to see me take cover and fire back. He said, ‘That’s the way I like to fly.’

“I was promoted to the rank of a corporal, and we were sent on a mission to some place in Germany. We met some enemy planes, but I was able to shoot down one of them. I was very proud of myself, but the officer in charge said, ‘You just got lucky.’

“I was assigned to the 2nd Division of the 3rd Corps, and we were sent to a battleground near the Loire River. The fighting was intense, and we suffered many casualties. I saw many of my comrades killed, and it was very sad. I missed you very much, and I often thought of the days we spent together.

“Please write to me as soon as possible. I miss you very much, and I want to hear from you. I will be happy to hear from you, and I will write back as soon as possible.

“Please address your letters: Second Lieutenant R. B. McKnight, U. S. Air Service, France, Via N. Y.”

Stage Carnival Out at Essanay Plant
Mrs. George K. Spoor Directs Novel Entertainment in Aid of Equipment for Unit 380, Home Guards.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, turned over the studios and grounds in Chicago, Friday and Saturday, Aug. 9 and 10, to Unit 380, Illinois Volunteer Training Corps, for a military carnival.

The carnival was held under the direction of Mrs. George K. Spoor, president of the Ladies’ Auxiliary of this unit of the Illinois guards. The unit has been furnished with a drill hall and guns by President Spoor, and the carnival was for the purpose of raising funds for other equipment.

The organization, which has as its nucleus Essanay employees, has been making a volunteer ground, snake oil, and fortune tellers, an Indian village and other attractions. A continuous vaudeville show with professional talent from the Chicago show houses, was held both days, and also sold out the house. Niklos R. Bubni, a noted singer, rendered the Aria from “Pagliacci” and the Toreador song from “Carmen,” in costume.

Charles R. Willis, world's champion climber, did some death-defying acts on a trapeze on top of the Essanay studio.

Shakeup of Officers in Local 110

President Joseph P. Armstrong Requested to Resign and Herman Mintz, Recording and Corresponding, Secretary, Excluded.

Joseph P. Armstrong, president of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., was requested to resign that position July 27, on account of several charges brought against him by members of the local organization, which were investigated under the direction of Mr. Dolliver, one of the inter-national officers of the I. A. T. S. E., who came on to the city for that purpose.

Charges were filed against the entire executive board of Local 110, and a meeting was called to act against Joseph P. Armstrong, the recording and corresponding secretary, Herman Mintz, was expelled. No other members were affected.

It is said Mr. Armstrong assigned several operators of Chicago Local 110 to preferred positions in picture theatres, on the payment by them of certain sums of money to him personally.

Richard Green, one of the international officers resident in Chicago, was appointed to fill the position of president of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., for the unexpired term. Frank Brown was appointed to fill the position of Herman Mintz for the unexpired term.

Indianapolis Sees a "Hoozier Romance"

All the Notables of the City Present at an Invitation Showing on Saturday, August 10.

S. Elgig's "A Hoozier Romance" opened a week's run at the Alhambra, Indianapolis, Sunday, August 11. Great preparations were made for the event by Messrs. Barton & Olson, proprietors. A pre-showing was given in the theatre the preceding afternoon, August 10, to which the mayor, city officials, literary societies and notable residents were invited by the management.

Several members of the executive staff of the Mutual Film Corporation and J. H. Herman, Selig's representative, went on from Chicago to be present at the invitation presentation, which was an unusual occurrence, owing to the high estimation in which James Whitcomb Riley is held in Indiana.

The script of the play was adapted from one of the poet's short stories by Colin Campbell, director of the production for William N. Selig. Mutual purchased the big feature recently and its booking is proceeding rapidly, over the whole country.

Alfred Hamburger has secured the initial showing for Chicago, for his Ziegfeld Theatre, on Michigan avenue, where it will be shown during the week beginning Monday, August 10. It has been booked for the Ascher Bros' circuit immediately afterward and also for the Lubliner & Trinz houses.

"America's Answer" Secured by Orchestra Hall.

In an announcement that was of interest, it was stated that the second official American film, "America's Answer," would begin an indefinite run at the Grand Opera House, this city, July 29. Now it has been learned that the pictures will not be brought at the Grand, but at Orchestra Hall, where they will have a run of three weeks, beginning Monday, Sep-teember 9.

The first of this series, "Pershing's Crusaders," had a most successful run at Orchestra Hall and it is fitting that the second also should be shown at the same place, more especially during the hot summer months. This splendid hall bears the reputation of having the best ventilated auditorium in the country. Only recently an air washer was installed for removing the dust from the intake of air and at the same time humidifying the air. Improvements to the ventilating system were also made, which increased its capacity from 59,000 to 105,000 cubic feet of fresh, cool air a minute. The test was made this year by the city health department, and showed that, with a seating capacity of 2,382, Orchestra Hall furnishes more than twice the number of cubic feet per capita required by the city ordinance.

Christy Comedies Popular, Says Friedman.

J. L. Friedman, of Celebrated Players, informs me that the series will be continued with an added attraction. In fact, the pictures of the thousands of visitors on the grandstand screen in the Essany projection room Saturday evening.

There were all the delights of a Coney Island with the added fun of circus sideshows, including open-air dancing, Fortune Telling, and a wonderful display of acrobatics.

A continuous vaudeville show with professional talent from the Chicago show houses, was held both days, and also sold out the house. Niklos R. Bubni, a noted singer, rendered the Aria from "Pagliacci" and the Toreador song from "Carmen," in costume.

Charles R. Willis, world's champion climber, did some death-defying acts on a trapeze on top of the Essanay studio.

Political Action Committee Appointed by President Hopp.

Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., appointed a political action committee of the organization on Tuesday, August 6. The chairman is William E. Haeney and the other members are Max Hyman, William E. Burgrun, E. A. Olson, George E. Liberal, slides by Harry C. Miller, William Ronn, Henry Von Meeteren and John Frundt. Mr. Hopp will act with the committee ex-officio.

F. J. Flaherty Severs Connections with Foursquare.

Frank J. Flaherty, manager of the Chicago office of Foursquare and owner of one-half interest in the office, severed his connections with the organization Saturday, August 3. Holmes C. Walton, from the Foursquare studios, New York, will have charge of the Chicago branch until Mr. Flaherty's successor has been appointed. Mr. Flaherty is one of the best known and most popular exchange managers in Chicago, and his proved ability as a hustler and a business getter will not permit him to remain long out of harness.

New Manager for Lane Court Theatre.

H. M. Rouga, formerly an exhibitor in Canada and, more recently, manager of the Famous Players Film Corporation's office at St. John, New Brunswick, made a pleasant call at this office Monday, August 5. Mr. Rouga has been appointed manager of the Lane Court Theatre, one of the theatres on the Ascher Brothers circuit, in this city. Mr. Rouga, formerly was managed by Bruce Godshaw for several years and he has been transferred to the management of the Frolic Theatre. Mr. Rouga stated that Lane Court was doing exceptional business and followed the policy of the manager, under whose management the house was very successful.

Ascher Brothers Open Midway at Rockford.

The Ascher Brothers opened their fine new Midway Theatre in Rockford Saturday, August 3. The event was a gala affair and the house, which seats 2,000 persons, was packed. Norma Talmadge in "The Safety Curtain" was the leading feature of the program. This makes the sixteenth house on the Ascher Brothers circuit. The Midway has a very attractive interior and many compliments were paid the owners on the beauty and appointments of the house. This theatre will be a big boon to the soldiers in training at Camp Grant.

What Los Angeles Exhibitors Are Doing

Riverside Theatre Remodeled.

Hove and Merrill of Riverside, California, are remodeling the Loring Theatre, one of the three houses operated by the firm, which will be ready for opening about October 1. The Loring will be remodeled throughout and seating capacity increased. Mr. Hove spends three days a week in Los Angeles booking features and keeping in touch with the market. While Mr. Merrill acts as business manager and active manager of the theatre. The firm also control the Regent and the Orpheum in Riverside, the latter house being now closed for the summer. The Loring will run pictures six days a week with a vaudeville bill on Saturday night and an occasional road show.

Audience Sings at Grauman's.

A pretty innovation at the Grauman Theatre during the run of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was the singing of old plantation melodies by the audience. Jesse Crawford, organist, played the accompaniment on the great pipe organ, and the words of "My Old Kentucky Home," "Massa's in the Cold Cold Ground," and "Old Black Joe" were flashed on the screen in time to the music, with an invitation to the audience to sing, which was accepted enthusiastically at every performance.

Notes of Theatres and Theatre Men.

Jacob Gottstein, from Seattle, owner of a string of theatres in the Northwest, is spending his annual vacation in Los Angeles and at the neighboring beaches.

The Burbank Theatre invited all sailors and soldiers on leave in Los Angeles during the run of "No Man's Land" to be guests of the management.

Howard Sheehan, part owner of the Rialto Theatre in San Francisco and brother of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox company, passed through Los Angeles on his honeymoon with his bride, who was Miss Edythe Claire Freiling, and was entertained at the Fox studio during his stay in the city. Mr. Sheehan and his bride departed for Catalina Island the next day.

Walter Farnum, owner of a motion picture show on Seventh street in Los Angeles, has closed his theatre for the summer, and is spending his vacation at Universal City, playing extra parts and incidentally learning a few tricks about the film industry.

Sid Grauman invited a lot of little orphans from the Los Angeles orphanage to see Marguerite Clark in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" during the run of that film at his house.

"Pershing's Crusaders" is in its third week at the Alhambra.

Lasky Leases Big Battlefield Site.

The Lasky Company has leased a tract of land consisting of 1,000 acres adjoining Griffith Park, west of Mount Hollywood, generally known as the old "Universal Ranch," for the purpose of filming outdoor scenes for Paramount and Artcraft productions. This famous ranch has been in continual use by various picture companies for nearly all the battles in history, from Roman and Egyptian to the present time, besides other scenes requiring large space. The Lasky company has had the use of a 1,500 acre ranch near an olive farm in the San Fernando valley, but the location was too far away from the studio. The present site is within five minutes ride from the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

Vitagraph to Send More Companies West.

An announcement has been made by the Western Vitage-graph Company that several of the companies now working in the east will be sent to the studio in Hollywood for the coming fall and winter. The difficulties of heating and ventilation in the east, the high cost of labor, and the insanitary conditions is one of the principal reasons for the contemplated move, it is said. Of the players likely to be sent west are Alice Joyce, Edward Earle, Anita Stewart, Gladys Leslie, Harry Morey and Bettie Blythe. Earle Williams, who intended returning to New York, has begun work on a new picture, and will probably remain in Southern California all winter.

Triangle Strike Averted.

A strike, which had been threatened because of the discharge of sixty union men at the Triangle studio at Culver City, was averted last week through the intervention of Charles T. Connell, Federal Labor conciliator. A charge was made that Triangle had laid off the union men without cause, and Chicago and New York motion picture houses were to be asked to refuse to handle any of the films produced by the Triangle company. Captain Connell brought about an understanding between the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Hands and the Triangle Corporation, and stated that the discharged men were to return to work.

Film Stars to Open Camp Theatre.

The central station War Squad of Los Angeles, made a raid on the film studios in Hollywood last week and corralled nearly a hundred young men within the draft age who were being used as extras in picture productions. At the first sign of Jerry, the hundred and fifty men were being used in a battle scene. All of these were questioned, and forty were found who could not give evidence of being engaged in some essential occupation. At other studios the same process was gone through with, and the film producers were advised to seek their sham battle recruits from among the men who have been placed in Class 5 by the draft board.

Gish Company at Norwalk Celebration.

Dorothy Gish, with her director, Elmer Clifton, and her company of players were the guests of honor at a street pageant and parade at Norwalk, Cal., where the soldiers stationed near that town were given a farewell entertainment before they were sent to France. Scenic artists from the Sunset studio were sent in advance of the celebration to assist in decorating the city, and moving pictures were made of the whole affair.

Studio Club Dance.

The Hollywood Studio Club gave a dance on the night of August 3 for the boys in training at the Hollywood High School. Admission was charged to all except soldiers and sailors in uniform. The entertainment was in charge of Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Mrs. William De Mille, Miss Anne Bauchens and Miss Letitia McElvaney, and the music was furnished by a jazz band.

Second Propaganda Film to be Made Here.

the fact that the Committee on Public Information had decided the second propaganda film for use in all allied and neutral countries and during and after the war—showing the United States aims and ends in entering the conflict—was to be made in Los Angeles. The local association of the Motion Picture Directors is headed by Frank Beal, president and chairman. Lois Weber, Walter Edwards, Joseph De Grasse, and Samuel Beall are the committee for the production. J. Scarle Dawley, president of the eastern division of the organization, has been in Los Angeles for the past few weeks in conference with President Beal.

Anderson Contemplates Move.

The Gilbert M. Anderson Photoplay Company is said to be considering setting up a New York office for its studio for the G. W. P. Productions. Mr. Anderson leaves within a few days for New York on business in connection with his theatrical interests, and his decision about the San Mateo proposition has not been finally settled.

Scenario Writer Off for France.

Frances Marion, writer of scenarios for the Lasky Company and for Mark Pickford, has given up her $30,000 a year salary to take a commission from the Government to travel through the allied countries in search of material which will be used as propaganda and which will be published in magazines and newspapers throughout the world. Miss Marion has an invalid brother who cannot go to war, and has taken it upon herself to represent the family at the front or wherever the Government sees fit to send her in the capacity of special correspondent. She visited France, England, Scotland and Ireland, and afterward may perhaps include Russia, Japan, China, India and Egypt in her itinerary.

Carmel Myers May Desert Screen.

Owing to the serious problem of obtaining original story ideas for motion picture production, the Palmer Photoplay Corporation has established a school for teaching the essential principles of scenario construction to the serious student of the photoplay. The Palmer plan includes a service designed to aid the author in finding the market for his scripts, although the organization will not act as broker between author and producer. Frederick Palmer, who has been connected with several successful scenario writers, is the scenario writer and editor during the past five years, is said to have the endorsement of such names as De Mille, Ince, Hart, Fairbanks, Pickford, Christie, Arbuckle and others.

Girls Swindled by Film School Man.

R. M. Godwin, director of a school of expression and motion picture acting, with quarters in the Mason Opera House building, is accused of having swindled a number of young girls who claim they have paid him money—one of them as much as $87—with the understanding that he was to educate them in the art of acting and a guarantee of a place in the capacity of film school. The girl claims that the only instruction they received was a few lessons in makeup and walking before a motion picture camera at Eagle Rock Park. The man is being sought on a warrant charging grand larceny.

Charges Apartment "Location" Injured Business.

Fannie Manzer, manager of an apartment house in Los Angeles, brought suit against the Universal Film Company for $50,000 damages, alleging that the use of the apartment house as a "location" for scenes in a problem play injured her business and brought her place into disrepute. Judge Weller refused to grant a motion for non-suit. The first witness for the defense was Phillips Smalley, who directed the photoplay on which the action was based. He testified that he selected the apartment house because it appeared to be a moderately priced location.

Lasky Home Guards Now Attached Unit.

The Lasky Home Guards, heretofore unattached, have become part of the State organization, with their own major in the person of Major Cecil B. De Mille. In obedience to orders from the State Adjutant General, the company has increased its numerical strength.

The company numbers 150 and is equipped with a two-company machine gun and hospital section. Every member of the unit is actively engaged in the picture industry and all numbers of有机. The Lasky Guards are regarded as the crack company of the State, and Governor Stephens, who reviewed the troops recently, told them that their fame had spread all up and down the Coast. The new unit will be known officially as the Fifty-first California Home Guards.

More Crusaders for Pershing.

Albert D. Cowles, former director with the Ince Company, has joined the Tank Corps.

Harry Edwards, of the Christie studio, went to a recruiting station the other day and enlisted in the Navy.

The next day a car came for him telling him to report for training service. Harry is proud of having beat the draft, even if the margin was close.

George Chesbro, former leading man at Universal City, England, has made a Sergeant at Camp Kearney.

De Witte Hagar, of Lasky, has enlisted in the United States Naval Reserve.

Justin O'Connor, assistant to Frank Woods, of the Lasky studio, has joined the Canadian Army.

George Meehan, of the Selznick studios, left August 1 for the Columbia University of Photography, from which institution he expects to be sent to France within the next six weeks. George was presented with a wrist watch from the employees of the studio.

Marshall Deats, from the business office of the Sunshine studios, has joined the Naval Reserve at San Pedro.

Film Stars Great Red Cross Workers.

On nearly any afternoon at the Red Cross Headquarters, on Eighth and Alvarado streets in Los Angeles, may be seen anywhere from one to half a dozen of the film stars from the various studios in Hollywood and vicinity, taking part in the entertainments in the little theatre on the grounds, presiding in the various booths, or performing such stunts as selling soft drinks, singing and dancing, and otherwise entering the giving of the service.

Winifred Kingston appears as hostess in the Tea Room at least once a week.

Julian Eltinge was guest of honor on Wednesday afternoon, singing the songs of his popular stage successes to entertain the guests.

Saturday of last week, the big day, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, through the courtesy of the Orpheum Theatre Company, was announced as the chief attraction of the afternoon. In the evening Otto Lederer presented a sketch called "Filmdom Stars." Other film players who took their turn at entertaining the crowd by selling soft drinks, dancing and singing, were Dustin Farnum, Eddie Polo, Leo White, and a number of young ladies who took part in the street dance.

Bebe Daniels, of Rolin-Pathe, sang at a Red Cross benefit given at a private residence on Westlake avenue on the same evening.

Among the entertainers at a lawn fete held in Pasadena, at which nearly a thousand dollars was raised for the Balloon Camp Club House at Arcadia, were Douglas Fairbanks, Vivian Martin, and a number of regular stage players.

The L-KO studios did their "bit" by donating quite a bit of wood to be sold at the Red Cross Salvage Station on Sunset Boulevard in Hollywood.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Personally Conducted by Glebier.

LADIES and gentlemen, the itinerary to-day includes two comedy studios, each of a distinctive type. First we shall see polite comedies in the making, and for the benefit of those who may not understand technical terms it may be well to explain what is meant by polite comedies.

Movie comedies are divided into two classes, the polite and the impolite, and while the purpose of each is identical, the one is an idealization of the world by causing the facial phenomenon known as laughter the modus operandi of their manufacture is somewhat different.

The punch in the impolite comedy is going through accident, while in the polite comedy the same thing is accomplished by incident. The impolite comedians assault each other with bricks and pie, and the gentle touches of the polite films use irony and suggestion.

The low and rakish building we are hearing is the factory maintained by the Charlie, Al and Charlie, sometimes known as the Joscose Brothers, because of the fact that they deal exclusively in jocularity.

In the current Al is joyfully celebrating the making of their one hundredth comedy. This fact should convince anyone of the breadth and brilliancy of the polie comedies. Surely no plant could turn out one hundred comedies in one hundred consecutive weeks if there were not many people whose funnybones refused to function except at this brand of humor.

The tall man crossing the lot is Charles Christie, the business head of the firm. The other equally talj and—as you could see if you would but remove his slightly bald gentleman, is Al, who directs the comedies. In other words, Al makes 'em and Charlie sells 'em.

The Christie boys are of Scotch descent, and they are living refutations of the base slander that was put upon a noble race when it was said the Scotch have no sense of humor. Another point in their favor is that they do not indulge in the known vice peculiar to the Scotchman—playing the bagpipe.

The far-away look in Al's face is there because he is having a mental view of a funny situation. If we stick around long enough we will have the opportunity of seeing it work out.

Step up on this big stage please, to your right.

The young lady attired in the blue dress and becoming hat is Ethel Lynne, a polie comedienne of considerable fame. Pointing to her left is Harry Edwards. The bunches of hair on the sides of Harry's face are the result of his make-up, a bit of make-up without which no main movie servant of the upper classes is complete.

The husky looking person perched on top of the step ladder is Elmo Lincoln, the blacksmith of the lot and of Berlin, and Tarzan of "Tarzan of the Apes." Mr. Lincoln spent so much of his time up in the tree tops while he was making Tarzan that he is unhappy unless he is up in the air all the time. Hence he chooses the ladder as a resting place instead of an armchair, as does the character which he plays, and looks to the right, who is George French. George is a character actor of much repute.

The young lady talking to Mr. French is Patricia Pennington, and she is to play the part of Mr. French's daughter in a comedy called "Al Mixed Up," that is on the fire next.

The person with the smile and the strange looking musical instrument is Smiling Dilly Mason. The instrument is known as the Ukulelo, and is the result of crossing the ukulele plant with the hula vine.

The ukulele in its pure state is a terrible instrument. The hybrid produced by the aforesaid grafting process produces a device which, although making a noise strangely resembling music, has a saddening effect, and is used in many comedy studios to tone down with the ebullient spirits of the players who might otherwise make comedies so funny that people would laugh themselves to death when looking at them.

The young lady talking to Mr. Mason is Louise Wood, whose pet name is Cops, and the petite person to her right is Clarine Seymour. Miss Seymour, former leading lady for ToTo the Clown, is a recent recruit at the Christie plant. Miss Seymour seems small in stature, but the fact that she is so near Louise Wood, who is somewhat plump, unduly emphasizes the fact. Clarine really weighs eighty-seven pounds.

Now if you will all follow me you will be able to see Al Christie rehearse a scene for "Some Cave Man." The set is an exact duplicate of a chic little bungalow of the period of the world's history when the majestic diplodocus and the saw-toothed tiger roamed the fields and forests, and the voice of the whangdoodle singing its doleful song could be heard where ever the woodbine twined.

The young man wearing the bearskin robe is Bobbie Vernon; the young lady similarly attired, who, by the way, is one of the few girls in the pictures with blond hair as well as natural golden tresses, is Dorothy Dane.

Al is instructing Bobby in the etiquette of love and courtship in the bumpy and balmy days of the cave men, when every citizen was master of his own house and had a club to maintain the dignity of his station, unhappily, that is long passed.

No, lady, this is a polie comedy, and we would not be able to see Dorothy seize the club and whack Bobby on the back with it if we stayed here all day, because the play does not call for that kind of action—and we have no time to argue the point. We will proceed to the next point of our journey.

Here's Where We Visit Charlie.

The row of chalets directly in front of us, although you would never suspect it, is part of one of the most famous studios of the country.

Meeting Charlie Feet to Feet.

It is here that Charlie Chaplin makes his frolicsome films. You will note that these buildings are very different from others devoted to the manufacture of movies. It is estimated that during the open season for traveling, eleven hundred and sixty-seven assorted tourists, from Ottumwa, Iowa, and other points, who all want to see Charlie face to face and feet to feet, seek admission to the studies daily.

Owing to the fact that he is under contract to make a movie film now and then, it is manifestly impossible to accommodate the public. If you would be just one hand-shake after another.

Charlie Chaplin and Lucille Cavanaugh.

Note the quiet air and evidence of efficiency on every hand as we pass through the outer offices. The sanctum sanctorum of Studio Manager John Jasper, whom you see seated at his desk, is to the left of Charlie's dressing room and observe the comforts and conveniences not found in the Lair of man-stuff.

The air of peace and quietness that obtains on the lot would never lead you to suspect that you were in the immediate vicinity of the place where comedies that rock the world with laughter are being made. Not a single hint of the north, which is part of the studio property, is inhabited by Sid Chaplin, Charlie's brother and manager.

The set on this stage is an exact duplication of the trenches "over there," and is being used for Charlie's latest comedy, "Shoulder Arms," a story of the great war set to laughter.

Of course, it is unnecessary to inform you that the man with the uniform, the hat and Chaplin mustache, talking to the boy, is the boy who is marrying the dear lady, is Lucille Cavanaugh, England's headline, who is visiting the plant. The other lady just talking to Charlie is the dear lady, who was an air of wishing the weather would get colder, deprivation, that you have seen that Charlie is just as funny when working before the camera as he is in anything that is to be said of comedians—we will proceed to inspect one of the most interesting exhibits the studio offers.

Give your attention to the strip of cement pavement extending across the lawn. The words of the prophets have been preserved in books; the scenes of nature's beauty spots have been limned in oil and water colors; the beauty of the early Greeks have been cast in deathless bronze—and here you see before you the very thing the prophet had written on imperishable granite, thus preserving for posterity the imprint of the feet. To ask the question with you, though in an indelible manner on the hearts of the present generation.

Last week a conspicuous character was seen prowling around the lot at night. Upon the approach of the watchman the prowler made a hurried exit, and it was seen that he was walking in exact imitation of Chaplin.

The man was none of the many Chaplin impersonators who had entered the grounds with the felonious intention of stealing Charlie's stuff, and for the fact that he was pursued with such vigor that he was forced to break the step he had acquired by placing his feet in the imprint on the cement walk, the miserable miscreant would have got away with it.

Blackton Extends Rawlinson Contract

Player Will Be Featured in a Series of Productions to be Made Following Release of "The Common Cause."

J. STUART BLACKTON has extended his contract with Herbert Rawlinson, whom he first signed to play the featured male lead in "The Common Cause," and now plans to feature him in several other Blackton specials to follow this propaganda picture, which he is producing under the auspices of the United States War Nursing Mission and in which Sylvia Bremer is the other featured player.

Commodore Blackton already has in hand the story and scenario for the second in this new independent series of special productions, which has accepted and purchased another story which will probably be the basis of the third, and also has options on two popular plays and novels from which he will probably select the fourth big subject of the series. The third Blackton feature, including "The Common Cause," is a typical Herbert Rawlinson role. Hence, the agreement which makes Mr. Rawlinson a Blackton star.

Distribution plans for "The Common Cause," which is to be released late in September or early in October, have been arranged and announcements will be made shortly.

BERGQUIST TO PHOTOGRAPH LOCKWOOD.

Blanche Sweet Shops in Fifth Avenue

New Harry L. Garson Star Then Discusses an Illusive Hat and Gown and "The Unpardonable Sin"

By Edward Weitzel.

APPLYING the familiar trick of stringing together the titles of a number of plays to the career of Blanche Sweet shows a curious want of affinity between the name of her first production picture and the title of her latest release. "A Man With Three Wives," her first picture, does not suggest in the slightest degree "The Hushed Hour," which has just been given to the public. However, the title of the blonde star's next release suggests perfectly the extent of the crime committed by the director as to his treatment of the actress.

The screen favorite's retirement for over a year caused so many motion picture fans to ask, "What has become of Blanche Sweet?" was born in Chicago, but came to New York for her photoplay debut. This was made at the old Edison studio, at the age of thirteen. She impersonated one of the trio of better halves of the bigamous gentleman. Experience on the spoken stage and a long dress were her chief aids in deceiving the director and the public as to her right to enter the bonds of matrimonity and acquire a one-third interest in the fickle affections of a badly damaged masculine heart. The Biograph, under Griffith, brought her into association with a body of now famous picture stars, Mary Pickford being one of them. Like all of the Griffith graduates, Blanche Sweet is ready to acknowledge the artistic debt she owes to the creator of "Hearts of the World."

Over a glass of lemonade in the cafe of the Great Northern Hotel Blanche Sweet gave the above information about herself, and then chatted of "The Unpardonable Sin," and the disappointment that came to her through a fetching hat and wrap that she bought to wear in "The Hushed Hour."

The remembrance of the affair made her quite pensive for a moment, but she turned a sigh into a laugh, as she commenced the recital of the hat and the wrap that were destined never to be perpetuated upon a strip of celluloid and fill the feminine film fan's heart with envy.

Wastes no Hat Description on a Man.

"They are certainly dreams and I fell in love with them both the moment I first saw them. I picked out the exact moment I should wear them in the picture, before I paid for them and had them sent home. The hat was a—pardon me, the description would be wasted on a mere man, wouldn't it?—but the wrap matched the hat perfectly, and I felt I was creating a sensation when I put them on at the studio and walked over to show them to Edwin Mortimer, my director."

"How do you like them?" I asked.

"Stunning," replied Mr. Mortimer, "but you don't intend to wear them in this scene, do you?"

"Why, yes," I faltered, all taken aback. 'I bought them on purpose for this scene.'"

"We'll find a better place for them. Ready, please."

"After the picture was completed I found out that the better place he meant was in one of my wardrobe trunks. I tried to introduce that hat and wrap into every scene where I could find any possible excuse, but that unfeeling man succeeded in discovering weighty reason for preventing me from wearing them, and all the time he pretended to admire the way they matched my gown and my complexion."

"Don't you smuggle them into at least one of the scenes?"

"Yes. I gave Mr. Mortimer such a deft glance the last time he started to object to their being used, he was afraid to do anything but smile and say 'All right!' He won the battle, just the same, as the picture was cut the one and only appearance of the hat and the cloak was eliminated." Blanche Sweet looked up with a half-serious smile. "Perhaps I set too great a store by them, but they certainly were becoming." "Now for the usual question, Miss Sweet: What is your favorite line of parts?"

"I haven't any. I like any part I feel is suited to me."

"And your role in the Rupert Hughes story?"

"I hope the public will like me in it as well as I like the character myself."

Famous Players Report New Contracts

Increased Business Requiring Many Additions to Sales and Booking Departments.

NEVER since the inception of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has the sales department seen such activity as is at present being evidenced in connection with the issuance of their new series of contracts. These contracts are pouring in requesting 100 per cent. service, from exhibitors, large and small, throughout the country. Despite many additions to the home office staff, the sales and booking departments are working day and night in an endeavor to keep up with the flood of contracts.

Record time in signing up for the entire new product of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the coming year was evidenced at the Baltimore Exchange when Guy I. Hughes, managing director of the Wilson Amusement Company, Baltimore, closed for all next year's Paramount and Artcraft pictures, in three minutes. "I called at your Washington office today," wrote Mr. Wonders to the home office staff, the sales and booking departments are working day and night in an endeavor to keep up with the flood of contracts.

STEVENS ADDED TO METRO STAFF

Robert Stevens, brother of the Metro star, Emily Stevens, has been added to the directorial staff at the Metro studio, and is at present attached to the working organization of Albert Capellani, who is preparing Screen Classics, Inc. The undertakings of Eugene and Nazma are the provinces of the Stevens, as Robert Stevens is a Shakespearean actor of note, and this is his first experience in motion picture work. He is busily studying every branch of studio endeavor, "learning the ropes," as an associate of Henry Kolker, who is Mr. Capellani's principal aid.

One Fourth Loan Featurette Is Ready
It is "The Taming of Kaiser Bull," produced by Carl Laemmle, with Mae Murray in Leading Role.

A short personal request of Secretary McAdoo and with the hearty consent of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, Mae Murray laid aside, for the time being, her own productions to make a featurette to assist the government in making the forthcoming Liberty Loan Drive the most successful of any of the four. Under the direction of Ernest Lloyd, who has produced all Special Attractions at Universal City, the featurette has been completed and entitled "The Taming of Kaiser Bull."

In the featurette Miss Murray plays the role of a cowboy and as such represents Uncle Sam. She is dressed in a variety of chaps, with wide sombrero and high boots and spurs, with a wicked forty-five dangling jauntily from her right hip. To complete the picture, a little package of Roll Your Own protrudes with its tell-tale tag from the shirt pocket.

"Your own" says Miss Murray, "and you will have more money to invest in Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps, but just the same, the Roll Your Own package is full of face powder, and an ivory pocket mirror and powder puff are in the left front pocket. Harry Carey, Universal's cowboy exponent, took great pains with Miss Murray's make-up and costumes for this feature.

"The Taming of Kaiser Bull" opens with the Kaiser, a role taken by a gigantic long-borne Arizona steer, cornering Democracy in the corral. Miss Murray, in the role of Uncle Sam, fires a bullet from a gun labeled First Liberty Loan. This only stirs the bull to greater fury. Miss Murray hurls a bayonet smoke-screen labeled Second Liberty Loan. In rage he charges on Democracy, while Miss Murray endeavors to beat him off. Drawing her lariat is the Third Liberty Loan. She throws it over the bull, which drags Miss Murray up and over the range of Pershing's Riders from the Rio Grande to the U. S. A. across the pond see her plight and rush to her rescue, and after a general mix-up they throw the bull. Miss Murray then brandishes him on the flank with the "Fourth Liberty Loan."

The picture ends with a close-up of Miss Murray raising her gun in the camera and saying, "Dig deep and come across for the Fourth Liberty Loan."

Commemorates England's Entry in War
Strand Theatre Exhibits Group of Pictures Illustrative of British Efforts for Cause of Freedom.

A GROUP of pictures exhibited at the Strand during the week of August 4 is of great interest and significance. It is entitled "Four Year for Freedom" and was shown in connection with England's entry into the war. Another point of interest in connection with these pictures is that they were compiled by Charles Urban, and include by way of introductions some of the naval scenes exhibited by him formerly in the first splendid group shown a couple of years or so ago revealing England's quickly and systematically prepared defense against Hun barbarism.

"Four Years for Freedom" includes scenes illustrative of the British Home front and shows the East Indian solders crossing the Tigris river on a pontoon bridge later passing through the streets of Baghdad. General Allenby's entry into Jerusalem is of unusual interest and shows the meeting of the commander-in-chief at the Jaffa gate, the passage of the troops through the streets, the introduction of the dignitaries of the city to General Allenby and staff and the reading of the proclamation of freedom. A part of the British aerial fleet in action is shown and also stirring scenes with the Canadians at the memorable battle of Vimy Ridge. One of the most thrilling sights of the pictures shows a charge of British tanks.

World's Minneapolis Man Joins Army

John LeRoy Johnston, for over two years correspondent for the Moving Picture World in Minneapolis and St. Paul, has been summoned for service in the National Army, and will likely be in camp by this time this issue is off the press. Mr. Johnston is the fifth of the World's correspondents to join the commander-in-chief in taking up the World's correspondence work he was artist and writer on St. Paul papers for seven years, editor of Amusements and of Reel News, northwest film weeklies, and more recently he has been publicity manager for the Minneapolis Universal exchange.

In addition to being a writer, Mr. Johnston is an artist and cartoonist. Upon leaving for overseas service, he was presented with a handsome wrist watch by Mme. Olga Petrova. He succeeded as Minneapolis correspondent for the World by William E. Mulligan, a writer on the Minneapolis Journal.

Mr. Johnston recently passed his twenty-first birthday and is a man of a decided original bent, both as a cartoonist and as a writer. He is a friend of yours, and your correspondent will remember the able account by him of the proceedings of the recent convention of the Northwest Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation. His work has regularly been of value to us and it is with mingled feelings that we bid him good-by and good luck as he goes forth to do his duty with other American men and women.

Facts and Comments

Are you doing any hard thinking on the question of foreign trade? Here is a great chance to exercise your gray matter to profitable effect. Right now there is a demand for American pictures because they are the best in the World’s market in quality and just about the only pictures available in any market now. But the latter condition will not always prevail. American producers will not always have a practical monopoly of the business that has been given them by conditions forced upon other countries by the War. Once peace is declared and picture-makers of France, Great Britain and Italy resume operations there will be strong competition for the world market. But while we are waiting for that time to come it is up to our manufacturers and producers to so exploit their products that it may become so favorably known to the civilized world that the preference will be in our favor. Keep your mind working on it.

First in importance in considering the question of the world’s market is the necessity of keeping the trade center in America. For years the greater proportion of the world’s output of motion pictures has been made in America, and for as many years the center of the world’s trade has been in London. There were two reasons for that condition: one was our lack of experience in handling exports and an unwillingness to learn; the second was a peculiar trade condition which enables picture men to get raw stock cheaper in London than in this country. The first condition we are correcting rapidly, but it is still possible to buy Eastman raw stock in London for less money than it can be purchased here. This practice may be good business for the raw film manufacturer, but it is bad for the American motion picture business. It ought to be corrected.

W

What preparations are you making for the Fourth Liberty Loan? We have gone through three loan campaigns successfully, but the amounts were comparatively small in comparison with the amount that will be asked in the next. Also, while the motion picture industry helped materially in raising the last loan, what we did was not a marker to what we will do this time. For weeks there has been a careful campaign in the planning under the leadership of Adolph Zukor. In the plans thus being made the picture interests of America will have a large and strenuous part. Everyone will have a chance to do his and her best. To a certain extent there will be plans for the exhibitor as there are for the manufacturer, the distributor and the player. Added to these plans and fitting into them harmoniously the exhibitor has an opportunity to do some thinking and planning on his own hook. Have you thought of it? Ask yourself what there is that you can devise that will strengthen the big program and induce your patrons to dig down for a few more bonds. Start the old “think tank” working for the next drive. It starts in September.

Since the casualty lists have been coming in we have not heard a word from motion picture theatre owners in protest against the contemplated increase in the admission tax proposed by the Congressional Ways and Means Committee, now laboring on that proposition in Washington. One large operator of legitimate theatrical interests, speaking for that branch of the amusement industry, has declared that the proposed doubling of theatre taxation will drive half of the legitimate houses out of business, but the picture theatre men seem to have no such fears. Experience has taught them that in times of stress their business prospers, and with a prosperous business they know that it will be no hardship to meet the levy. In which case why worry?

When contemplating the ultimate increase in taxation it will be well to remember that the act of Congress imposing the new tax rates has not yet been enacted. The schedules are only in process of formation. Hence, it would be a mistake to make any effort to meet the added expense of operating until the law providing for the collection of the new tax has been passed and signed. This is not a drive against the theatre owner, but a measure which makes him a part of the tax gathering machinery of the government. The public will quickly understand that the tax must be added to the regular price of admission and pay it cheerfully, knowing that, in doing so, it is taking up but a small part of the sacrifice which civilization demands in the great effort being put forth to make this fine old world safe for peace-loving, law abiding people to live in forever hereafter. Learn to pay with a smile, for our boys are smiling and dying “over there.”

Directing According to Directors
By LOUIS REEVE HARRISON.

WHEN Eugene Rusk in of Broadway started in to direct the production of moving pictures for “The Sage of Truth and Beauty” and, incidentally, three hundred a week, he had a lot of ideas, some imagination, tact in handling actors and experience enough to make the salary worth while. From this experience he had learned that actors have more in them then they realize—it is the director’s business to bring out this latent ability so that they may interpret at their best.

The studio director is like a leader of grand orchestra.

He must consider above all things harmony of performance.

Even great soloists must not play too loud. Eugene was a believer in the great actor. There were many who knew how to do fairly well, few who could adequately present an intense dramatic situation or adequately portray a complex of character. But he had not been long in the studio before he was made to feel like a door mat for the “illustrious ONE” to wipe his feet on. He was supposed to stand with bated breath while the “ONE” imposed his own ideas, not only upon how it should be done, but what should be done.

The great actor must be perpetually in the lime-light.

The play must suit him regardless of the public.

The great actor must have a publicity vehicle.

Now Eugene had an idea there were audiences to be entertained, not actors to be advertised, and there was intrenched in his judgment one guiding principle—“The fewer dull vehicles foisted on the public the sooner will benefit accrue to all concerned, producer, exhibitor, and public as well.” When Eugene enunciated this principle before the Illustrious One, he was given the merry Ho-Ho. When Eugene further said that a really great actor could interpret many roles, not be confined to playing up his own personality, the Illustrious One turned his back in disdain, called his chauffeur and shrugged his shoulders—“Home, James!”

Then Eugene got his from the Business Manager.

Eugene—We just got a play called “Eddy’s Pus Wrecks”—

Eugene—You mean Oedipus Rex. Been done to death.

Eugene—Why not let me help you select the play? Eugene—Can that. We must have one with a big name.

Eugene—Why not stories that reflect the life around us? I feel that we exist for the public and by public consent. People have eyes. Let us show them what is amusing, hopeful, bright, entertaining or even edifying in the moment that is passing or in the future that is coming.

E. M.—What are we paying a star ten thousand a week for?

Eugene—To milk you dry and then run his own company.

E. M.—How about Madame Sylphine, advertised everywhere?

Eugene—Yes, by a corset concern, but I will see what can be done.

Scene II, Madame’s dressing-room, a realm of enchantment.

Madame S.—So glad to meet ye-ou, Mr.—er—ah—Rushin. My last director was so stupid. He allowed me to enter from the side. You see—my profile is not perfect. I must come down from Upper Centre. I could be seen to better advantage descending steps with a train and picture hat, a long-handled parasol for a staff—I have a lovely one just from Paris, in spite of this dreadful war. I hope it ends soon—don’t ye-ou.

Eugene—Yes—sem

Madame S.—Then you must stop the camera for me to arrange my hair in that mad scene. I imagine I have committed a murder, though I am as innocent as an unborn child. Still I have to tear my hair a little, and there is a way of doing it becomingly.

Eugene—When I get it just right you can start that camera again—it is to be a close-up. I adore close-ups—the public likes to see me that way—don’t ye-ou?

Eugene—Yes—sem

Madame S.—Then I have the loveliest boudoir cap you ever laid eyes on. Work in a scene where I can show that and my new China-silk peignoir. You will do that for ME, won’t ye-ou, Mr. Rushem?

Eugene—Yes—sem

The Three Sisters—A Fairy Story
By ROBERT C. MCGRAW.

THERE were once three sisters who lived together in comparative harmony. But two of the sisters, named Miss Literature and Miss Drama, were older than the third and they were inclined to overlook her growing beauty. They went out to parties and other functions, neglecting to take Miss Photoplay, the youngest sister, along. The latter, conscious of her own merits, smiled at the exclusiveness and patronizing manners of her elders. When they dressed to go out, moving past her with a slight sniff, she sat quietly by the fireside and watched them depart, refusing to take them too seriously for her own peace of mind.

For the younger sister had a great deal of humorous philosophy in her makeup, and she knew from the very first, if they did not, that she had quite a lot of what Mr. Barrie has called “that damned charm.” So, when they left her, she was usually busy with her own devices, popping corn, cracking nuts, knitting socks for the soldiers, or doing goodness knows what a pretty young girl finds to do around the fireside. They said she was a little drudge and had no sense of art and often laughed at her, but she did not seem to care.

When the others had gone a change would often come over the younger sister. She would go to her room and attire herself in the most wonderful of garments, some of which had been handed to her by the elder sisters. The gowns were often quite fresh and new, but the sisters had explained to her that they must keep up with the everchanging styles, and that she was quite welcome to them. They might well have been astonished to see what she was making out of these cast-off clothes, for when she was fully dressed the third sister was really quite as beautiful as themselves, and had of course the advantage of being younger.

Once attired, the little miss would press a button and presently she would enter a taxicab and speed away into the night. She was going to what the elder sisters termed “one of those horrid movie balls” and she shivered with a mixture of apprehension and delight every time she did it. She knew they would not approve of such a thing, but she was very popular at these balls and she was not content to be a Cinderella all the time.

Presently a hue and cry went up that Prince Public was searching for a certain young lady who had lost a slipper at a ball, and would not be happy till he found her. The slipper had been lost at one of those horrid movie balls, too, and this annoyed the elder sisters exceedingly for they had not been there. They did not even know that Prince Public was in the habit of frequenting such places!

But if Prince Public had his heart set upon finding the lady who could wear the slipper, they must of course oblige him. So they began trimming their toes and paring their heels in order to be able to give Prince Public what he wanted. The process caused them to limp rather painfully, but the slipper was said to be ridiculously petite, and they agreed that at least one of them must wear it.

Having got themselves up to the best possible advantage, the elder sisters sallied forth, leaving the third sister as usual by the fire. They moved out as consciously as possible and soon had the satisfaction of meeting Prince Public. He greeted them with a smile, but when it came to trying on the slipper, there was general disappointment. With all the pains they had taken, the slipper was still a wee bit small.

Prince Public bowed himself away and the elder sisters wandered about in a sad and discontented state. After a long while they determined to return home, thinking it would be nice to spend at least one evening with the third sister by the fire. When they arrived, great was their chagrin to find that Prince Public had preceded them and that the slipper had been found a perfect fit for their sister, little Miss Photoplay!

The elder sisters, Miss Literature and Miss Drama, were naturally quite peevish at this, but they were really very nice girls at heart, and besides Prince Public was still fond of them. So they both invited little Miss Photoplay and she invited them to the next movie ball, and they all lived happily ever after.

Cheer Up, Brother Johnson!

By Edward Weitzel.

According to Julian Johnson, “The chief thing wrong with motion pictures today is the class of intelligent people who continually find fault with them.” He also puts it down that “We want from the intelligent men and women of the United States unquestioning, enthusiastic belief in the motion picture as an instrument of destiny in bringing men and their motives together throughout the world, as a disseminator of knowledge, and a purveyor of beauty and emotion.” He also utters this solemn warning: “Have a heart and help. If you don’t, I tell you that as sure as we’re both here, the Motion Picture—and the Photoplay, which is the Motion Picture’s biggest and finest expression—will come to a full stop.”

Cheer up, Brother Johnson! The Motion Picture, either capitalized or lower cased, will be doing business throughout the civilized world and also in a portion of the uncivilized long after the seed of the Kaiser has ceased to trouble the earth. The screen has already become a necessity and a part of our daily life, and will no more be thrown into the discard than will its great forerunner, the printing press.

The intelligent men and women of the United States will always judge the Motion Picture on its merits—and recognize its limitations. They realize that the method of producing the photoplay is the most costly form of getting beauty and emotion before the public. It is not possible to take a portion of a pictured story as one can a passage from a novel. For, in a half hour the motion picture is giving such a wonderfully condensed criticism of life as that found in the philosophy of Friar Laurence:

So light a foot
Will never wear out the everlasting flint:
A lover may bestride the gossamers
That idle in the wanton summer air.
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

The artist paints a great picture and it is reproduced by many inexpensive methods. The dramatist writes a fine play and it is possible to own a copy of the work and study it at leisure. The motion picture can be seen only in a theatre, and is always shown in its entirety. At some future day every home of refinement and culture may be equipped with its own projection machine, and short pictures, appealing to the highest artistic sense, may be a part of every intelligent person’s motion picture library.

In the meantime, it may be as well to refrain from uttering solemn warnings from scolding the public for its lack of judgment in the screenplay. The silent stage has a loyal following, in spite of its mistakes, and will work out its future by force of its inherent worth.

Nothing will so assist its progress as a concerted effort on the part of directors, scenario and continuity writers, to relegate the screen novel to the rear and produce photoplays that are dramas in the theatre sense of the word.

Zukor Will Aid Department of Labor

In Carrying Out Billboard Campaign of Famous Players—Lasky, He Will Reserve Space for Message to Workers.

I

TS attention having been attracted by the recent announcements in the trade papers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation’s country-wide billboard campaign, the United States Department of Labor has written to President Adolph Zukor requesting that a portion of the space to be used be reserved for a message from the Department.

This letter, while incidentally laying emphasis on the tremendous interest being aroused in the campaign everywhere, opens a new avenue through which the motion picture industry may render most valuable service to the Government. This is through systematic poster displays in the lobbies of picture theatres in every city and village in the country, and in a letter to David K. Niles, of the Bureau of Information and Education of the Department of Labor, Mr. Zukor not only has made the suggestions but has offered the services of his organization for carrying it out. This, of course, is in addition to the co-operation in the billboard advertising which the Labor Department solicited and which was forthwith promised by Mr. Zukor.

The shortage of labor in the essential industries has been a matter of considerable concern to the Government for some time, and Mr. Zukor calls the attention of exhibitors to the fact that here lies an opportunity for service in helping to win the war which they can embrace with a minimum of inconvenience, constituting an effective supplement to their work of assisting the Fourth Liberty Loan “over the top.”

Send 'Em Along.

W. S. McLAREN, of the Majestic and Colonial, Detroit, dropped in the other day to look over the town and have a talk with people. The first thing he said when he left his office was, "There elaborate campaigns planned by such men as McCormick are interesting, but they do not help give much help to the man who has not an art room and a scene studio at his command. What the average manager is interested in is what the other fellow is doing with the means at the command of the average exhibitor." That is entirely true, but the trouble is that the man who is merely doing the best he can with what he can get, like Steve Farrar, for example, does not always realize that he is doing something even more noteworthy than McCormick when he gets a good display, and so he does not bother to send in his stuff with a word of explanation. If you've been helped by someone else you can pay back your debt to the other fellow by paying in kind. Don't think that because your stuff does not compare with McCormick's it is not equally interesting. Send it along anyhow, and you may help some other chap out of a hole. Don't leave it to George. Make George your middle name and do it yourself.

A Country-Set, Two Column Advertisement, four and one-half inches deep, Showing What a Printer Will Do If Left to His Own Devices.

four and one-half inches across two columns; ample space in which to get plenty of good display if the copy is marked properly, but the printer, lacking a knowledge of values, does the best he can, and that is very poor. Only two advertisements in the entire four-page look at all well. One is office copy and the other is a bank advertisement with only one display line, in which the printer could not very well go wrong. The office has an extended letter of the same face as the house signature. This extended letter should have been set in even though it required the omission of the word "theater." A three-em space should have been used between the letters to further gain the suggestion of size, "Today and tonight" would have been set in a ten-point bold with equally good results, and "Today, matinee and night" would have been more definite than "today and tonight," the latter being counted as part of the day. Better still would have been the times of showing, "Today at 2:30, 5:45 and 7 P. M." The next line could have first been done, followed by the house name. "World-Brady presents the clever child actress" should have gone in one line of six-point to permit an eighteen-point display for the name of the little star. Then should have followed a line in eight-point, "Co-starring with George MacQuarrie," set with the name of this player in bold face, and following with another six-point line carrying the "in a five-reel feature." This would have let the name of the play gain prominence, and here, too, an extended letter should have been used. The "also" should have been spaced between this and the next line, serving as a dash and then the Chaplin bank. By setting the admission prices all on one line and the news weekly in a slightly smaller face the lines could have been better spaced to indicate the three divisions of the program. The printer does not know this because he is a type-setter and not an advertising expert. He must be told by means of markings on each line of type. The New Virginia has no opposition and does not have to make a fight for business, but now is a good time to train the printer against the coming of opposition. Money is lost if the advertisement is not made as attractive as possible. Much more can be done with nine column-inches. It should be possible in such a space to give a brief selling talk, a line or two suggestive of the play.

For A Pair of Sixes.
The Victoria, Buffalo, uses a good line for Essanay's "A Pair of Sixes" when it remarks:

Ordinarily a pair of sixes is a poor hand, but you'll give it a good hand when you see it.

But the printer was asleep when he set a following line as "See him and go into aecstacys." Outside of Germany only Diety gets the capital H.

The Hill Heading.

We have mentioned the Hill (Newark, N. J.) programs, but this is the first time we have been able to reproduce the new form since Mr. Mack uses mostly green stock. But he must have run out of color lately and used white, so here is his heading, normal size. The sheet is 3½ inches wide and drops about eight inches. It is a compact head and gives all the facts except the telephone number in small space and with good display. It is a good model to follow, even in larger sizes. The date is given as July, but as a matter of fact the program is issued weekly with an editorial comment on the current bill. In each issue, the front being used for text and the back for the formal program.

Improving Upon Ruff.
The Dayton theater, Dayton, Ohio, is using "Come" as a variant to Ralph Ruffner's "Go" for a house slogan. It does not seem to have as much force as go, but it works all right. We like better the "Try to get in" which Ruff is now using for the Rialto. That should be used, however, only for the big things, and a slogan should be given in each advertisement. System for July has a discussion of house slogans, and it is shown that the general phrase is seldom useful to the house. At a public meeting the slogans of numerous merchants were read off and the audience was asked to connect the slogan with the house. In every case the slogan that did not carry a punch idea was not connected with its house, and in one case three houses were credited with one slogan because it would fit any one of the three. But the slogan with a smash was hooked up with its store right away. In the same way the theaters that have a punch line will profit by it where no amount of advertising will fix a colorless phrase. "Always a good show" is too general, and the "House of Quality" really means nothing. "Where the Reels Run Right" would be better, but something still more individual would carry more weight. But get something that has a rhythm and improves the copy. For a time the red-fronted Woolworth stores were almost a trademark, but today a ten-cent store that is not painted red is as scarce as dead mules. The idea was so good that all the others took it. It is the same way with the red band across the window of the United Cigar Stores. All the others are using it and cannot be stopped. The safest way is to get a good phrase and then patent it as a trade mark if possible, though a sentence cannot be patented unless it has some unique feature, but if you patent a design including your phrase, and always use the design, then the use of the phrase by another house could probably be prevented at common law as an effort to detract from your trade mark, though the phrase itself cannot be patented. Getting back to Dayton, we think that the fastsy lettering is not well advised. A clean, readable type is better for title and star even though it may hurt the artist's feelings to tell him so. The advertisement is a two sizes with a heavy indent to the left. As the cut was placed to the left of the page in the outside column, the indent did not work as well as it would have done had it been between columns, but of course the house could not know just where the cut was to be placed.

Plugged For Pershing.

This is a reproduction of a reproduction from Amusements, a local paper, showing how two Minneapolis dailies plugged the Government's war picture in the Minneapolis metropolis. The display was a two-page layout with the lower bank giving the names of twenty-six firms which contributed space to the Committee on Public Information. The picture was given a regular showing at the Metropolitan, but because of the patriotic interest of the subject the papers solicited the merchants' aid in advertising the picture, and they contributed willingly, the advertisement giving the stamp of importance to the showing. This meant much more than the mere advertisement itself. It gave the film dignity. S. Barrett McCormick gained somewhat similar results from "My Four Years in Germany," but there the merchants carried allusions in their different advertisements, while this is the result of concerted action on the part of the merchants represented, just as leading firms paid for pages and smaller spaces for the Liberty Loans and War Savings Stamps. This action put the picture on the same plane with other national movements, and the idea might well be copied by others. Make a note of it, but do not try to obtain this publicity for the melodramatic "patriotic" pictures or your end will be defeated. Save it for something really worthy of the effort.

Floated an Advertisement.

George J. Schade, of the Schade theater, Sandusky, Ohio, sends in the photograph of a float used in the Fourth of July parade. It offers a good suggestion to others, and it would be worth while putting up for future reference. You may not think you are ever going to need a float, but you never can tell. The basis for this is a Cadillac car which half concealed in the foliage. In the rear carnival masks; to be had of most large costumers, were planted, these including a policeman, cat, dog, lion, rabbit, giant, clown and elephant. Two sets of the flags of the Allies, eight to a set, were used, but these fluttered in the wind and did not take well. The donkey mask was worn by a man who worked the effects. It not only brought good business on the Fourth, but made talk that lasted well past the celebration. It pays to get into these local affairs to as large an extent as you can afford, for it all comes back.

Ruff Stuff.

The Rialto, Butte, Ralph Ruffner's new home, is of white terra cotta and has to have its face washed now and then to keep it presentable. One of these interesting events happened just after Ruff arrived and the moment he saw the scaffold and the people looking up at it, he went inside and had a banner painted reading, "Just hanging around waiting for Sunday's show." Then he gave the public something to see when they looked. The other lettering is on the same style as the recent "My Four Years in Germany," and reads (in red) "See Texas Rangers in action in Rex Beans' and Joseph H. Lewis' new areal, "Superman, Sunday." It will be noted that the white foreground is the second element of the tricolor. Ruff suggests using this near the date line on a Fairbanks:

Part as Lightning.
Funny as Heck.
While the coin's merry
Be on deck.

He says it worked for him, and it isn't poetry at that—just Ruff Stuff.

The Daily News, Toronto, uses a half-page directory regularly each Saturday giving the complete program for the week at practically all the houses, and most of these houses repeat on week days with the current bill. The cut shows the full weekly announcement and on the left a daily section. Not all houses are represented in the daily insertion, though such a directory is comparatively inexpensive and worth the investment. The reproduction might interest the advertising man-ager of the most enterprising of your own papers. Try it on him if you live in a town with a dozen houses or more.

Proof Reading.

The usually impeccable Elmwood, Buffalo, in a recent program shows that their printers must have lost some men to the draft. They announce "Old Hirtwell's 'Clue" instead of "Cub" and "Journey's End" instead of using the "The," while in "Who is to Blame" it is printed "Taro Sam" instead of the Japanese "San." If the Elmwood can slip, anyone can, so make note to be particularly careful in your own proof reading from now on. It is not up to the printer, It is up to you and to you alone. It's not even up to your assistant.
Using the Kaiser.

This half page was made up by the American theater, Eild, Okla., for "The Kaiser," using two of the ready-set examples of the Universal in conjunction with its own type layout. The result is better than might be expected from the use of two distinct advertisements within a third, and may suggest an idea to others. Under the layout used, it probably was not possible to use the house signature in larger type, since it had to set against the diagonal, but apart from this the result was effective and should suggest similar use of other ready set advertisements in building up a larger space than the cuts provide for. We think that to "stagger" the title in four lines as THE KAISER, the Beast of Berlin, would have gotten a better display and still have allowed the use of the inserted cuts.

A Ballyhoo Menace.

L. A. De Hof, of the Garden, Baltimore, got up a boat to advertise the showing of "My Four Years in Germany," and, as told in the news columns lately, the man who impersonated the Kaiser was arrested under the work or fight law as being in non-essential employment.

A Novel Advertising Stunt which Resulted in the Arrest of the Impersonator of the Kaiser for Being in Non-Essential Employment.

Personally we think that popularizing this propaganda play should be regarded as essential employment, but the incident should serve as food for thought to those contemplating street work. This is a case where the Kaiser really went to work.

Helping Others.

Abel H. Kaufman, of Kaufman's Specials, Memphis, booms his business by taking an intelligent interest in the business in general. He sends in a clipping from a paper in Friendship, Tenn., which is out of the ordinary and which may suggest an idea to others. Mr. Eaglin seems to have caught all angles of the idea. A part of the money goes to the school, a part to the government, in admission taxes, and a part to the Red Cross. His announcement reads:

COMING TO STAY.

I wish to state that my purpose in starting a permanent picture show at the school building is not altogether for profit as the first 20 per cent. goes for the use of the auditorium and house lights which will go to the school; second, it will help my Uncle Sam to lick the Kaiser because it will provide a war tax, and in addition to this I intend to devote 10 per cent. of net receipts to the Red Cross until every wound inflicted by the German war machine is healed, until our government has provided the pension after the war to take care of same.

Notwithstanding all this I intend to show the very best pictures available, educational, moral, sentimental, comic and patriotic. And in this way I earnestly solicit and firmly believe I shall receive the support and patronage of the best people of the community. I also believe there is enough good in all to see and appreciate the efforts I am making and the expense I have gone to put this over.

Remember, I am not looking to the show business for a living, for I make a living in the shop on Main street.

Thanking everyone for your kind consideration of me in the past and for yours in the future, I am,

Yours to serve,

J. W. EAGLIN.

His first throwaway lacks definiteness, and for he merely announces "Five big reels of moving pictures, including a dandy comedy." There is nothing very convincing in that announcement. The title, even when it is not known, has some advertising value and can be presented attractively, but five reels of unknown title does not make the same appeal. A better bank in the announcement that children under twelve will be admitted free if accompanied by parents, and adds "Adults 15c and your money back if not satisfied." That has a convincing ring. With a store at his back, Mr. Eaglin can make each enterprise work hard for the other.

Used Cartoons to Help.

Cartoon advertisements are not unusual, but Eugene Levy, of the Orpheum, Seattle, did something new when he used a couple of sketches to draw attention to the scene cut. We do not think that the scheme will work regularly, for it is apt to detract from the strength of the main cut, but as a just once it does nicely. The design is clipped from a four column full length and it was also used for a two tons through the week.

Keep Her Cool.

It is no advertisement to have your cashier sweltering in the ticket box, no matter how cool the interior of your house may be. Even if you have to take one fan out of the house, keep your ticket seller cool, and it would be the part of wisdom to so place the fan that it does not show. Get the general effect of breeziness without showing the mechanism and the effect upon the possible patron will be marked. And see that the girl has a summery costume in warm weather, that helps too.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other merchandise which beyond economical cost is excessively priced. We have always endeavored editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than adequate), will receive carbon copy of the department only by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every line progressive question asked properly will be answered. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

The School Scheme.

We have, I think, succeeded in showing down, if not entirely squeaking, the "school" proposition, which was coming up strong. The writer attended two conferences on that proposition, both held in the offices of the Manufacturers Notice department. The first was a meeting called by the secretary of that organization to consider the financial arrangements made for the purpose of securing satisfactory projectionists non-essential. It was proposed to place ample capital behind the proposed school, or schools. The National Association was acting in perfect good faith, believing a crisis was at hand which might close a large proportion of the theaters of the country. It was proposed to have the editor of this department act as one of an advisory board to handle the matter.

We very promptly informed the meeting that no crisis as yet existed, since the order was not yet promulgated, and that we would, neither personally or as representative of the Moving Picture World, have anything to do with any move of that sort until the international officers of the organization representing the projectionists non-essential had sent the word of their approval on the matter. Mr. Elliott, secretary National Association, gave instant consent to my calling up Assistant President Doliver, who, at the time, was working on the whole thing, was not aware that any such decision was regarded (you have all read the account of that by now) we received a wire from Secretary Elliott, while at South Lynn, Conn., reporting our presence at a conference with labor leaders next day. After a talk and a down, found Secretary Elliott, Assistant President Doliver, First Vice President Cannavan and three other members of the executive board of the I. A. Fuld and Bloomfield, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review; Gillette, of the Motion Picture News, and Lee Ochs, president Exhibitors' League, present.

It seems a report had gone out, emanating no one seemed to know where, that Lee Ochs, president Exhibitors' League, had raised, or proposed raising a fund of $20,000 with which to "fight the projectionists." This President Ochs emphatically denied, branding it as slander, pure and simple. After Mr. Ochs had explained his position in the matter of the schools, emphasizing the point that all he or his organization desired was to be protected from genuine shortage of projectionists (a quite reasonable desire, by the way, and one with which no man could seriously take issue); the writer, (through the chairman of the meeting, Mr. Weeks) made a request to President Ochs to correct this question: "Mr. Ochs, you as president of the National Exhibitors' League represent that body in this meeting. Will you accept the assurance of the international officers of the projectionists' organization here present that they will take care of the situation and protect you from any actual, bona fide shortage of operators?"

President Ochs replied: "Certainly. That assurance will be entirely satisfactory."

The writer then, through the chairman, asked Assistant President Doliver this question: "Mr. Doliver, this Question and my question to President Ochs and his reply. Will you and your colleagues here present agree to protect the exhibitor from any bona fide shortage of projectionists, the assurance that your reply will include not only the New York City, but the entire country." To this Assistant President Doliver replied: "We most certainly will.

There was then further discussion as to the schools which had already been started in some cities. These over-zealous exhibitors who have started schools are, it was pointed out by Assistant President Doliver, playing with fire, and unless their activities be curbed serious trouble might, and probably would result.

Incidentally, Mr. Ochs and Assistant President Doliver agreed to prepare statements on this phase of the matter for publication, and the meeting disbanded at 1:30.

Power's Motor Drive Trouble.

Walter L. Green, Morgantown, North Carolina, asks us to speak his Power's motor drive for him, or tell him how to do it himself. He says:

Will you kindly help me out of the following trouble. Am running a Powers five horse power drive projector. Installed new friction material on driving wheel few days ago. After rec- assembling parts there was an unusual noise. Friction mate-rial is true, and not worn. It is in line with driving shaft. Motor attachment runs right until I throw on the load; also at times it will run all right for a few minutes after which the trouble returns. It seems to be some thing in coupling on motor shaft, because it runs back and forth in the motor. I have the two couplings adjusted so that there is sufficient play for the universal flange. Best wishes both to yourself and the department.

In all probability the trouble lies in the armature shaft. End play in this shaft is taken by cutters with one another; motor to run conti- nually if the shaft. Should these washers become worn end play will develop. This might cause a rumbling, particularly at starting, especially if friction pulley shaft H-22, fifth front of the Handbook, is too small. After starting and coming up to speed the rumbling is not apt to manifest itself, except when there is a change in voltage. The remedy is to see that sufficient play is left at the shaft to prevent end play. It may require one or two at each end. It is also possible that friction pulley shaft H-25 is so adjusted that it is too close to coupling on motor shaft, which would cause some trouble, with end play present in armature shaft. This information comes direct from the Nicholas Power Company, and is official.

Scheck Retires.

George Hoekman, Cleveland, Ohio, asks for address of J. K. F. Com- pany, and says:

Picture theaters of this city are 160 per cent. organized. This is about some shortage of men just now, and a few of our men are working double-shift. Several of the members of local union 15 are in the service of Uncle Sam, which is the answer.

We are keeping them supplied with smokes. We are holding a banquet to brother Scheck, international organizer I.A.T.S.E. & M.P.G., one of the most successful all connection with the organization in order to engage in business. We are sorry to lose men like him.

If money is the only object of most of us who have served you in the past, could make definitely more of it in "business." Incidentally, let me tell you that you right now have a corps of international officers of whom you may well be proud. Charles Shay stands in a class by himself as a shrewed, astute, honest official who has accomplished wonders for your good. Doliver, assistant president, is a man who will fill that office or any other you can put him in, thoroughly, efficiently and completely. Billie Cunnahan has a foundation of sand and good sense to start with. He has developed into a wonderfully good official, shrewd, conciliatory, diplomatic. Your international secretary is also the example of the right man in the correct place. The rest of the international officers I am not so well acquainted with, but I observe that they are doing excellent work, and that is in what counts. You will definitely understand that the foregoing is most emphatically not a mere "jolly," but a statement of the even and exact truth. It is designed as a well-deserved tribute to real ability.

Don't Know of Any.

Stephen S. Karkala, Bradford, Pa., asks:

Want names of parties manufacturing or selling apparatus for driving two or three projectors with one motor to run conti- nually. Apparatus must be so that projectionist can shift from one machine to the other, and must not be very costly. Must be durable, convenient for one man to handle, and thoroughly re-liable.

Sorry, but I know of no such apparatus at this time. There was such a thing made by the Wahlard Machine Company, Traverse City, Michigan. When it was rather expensive. J. Claude Reville, Florence, South Carolina, also made a very good multiple clutch control, but whether he still makes it or not I do not know. You will find both these devices described and illustrated in the Handbook, pages 277 and 290.

1. Changeover Signal Device.

From V. Wood, member Local Union 320, Fort Worth, Texas, we have the following:

An ingenious device for automatic change-over signals invented by myself, for which letters patent have already been issued. Drawings are at hand, I think, self-explanatory, and no description of it except to say of it that it is adjustable to any size magazine, as well as to any size reel or reel hub. It may be adjusted to give signal at any point the projectionist may choose. A complete description has been issued for its marketing, and active steps in that direction are now being taken. Our business representative, DeWitt C. Feegles, was in New York recently to confer with the manufacturer and attempt to secure for you the full working model he had with him. But at the World office he was each time informed that you were "out." Am now submitting plans and descriptions, and you will give them careful consideration and your indulgence. Several devices have already been described in the department, and some of these are direct infringements of a similar nature. Warning is hereby given that we intend to protect our rights fully.

In the first place, Brother Wood, if your business representative called at the World office he should have been supplied with my home phone number, where he could have gotten into immediate touch with me. I have told you all before, and now tell you again when you visit New York City you can get into touch with the editor, if he is in New York at the time, by calling telephone Bath Beach 2733. That is my private phone number, which Feegles should have been supplied with at the World office. I have talked over certain points in this invention with Feegles. I cannot use blueprint for making a cut, hence cannot print the drawing unless you supply a partner of mine.

Of the Richardson's Handbook

W. L. BRANTLEY, Managing Exhibitor of Nacodoches, Texas, says:

"I have received my copy of The Handbook, and think it GREAT. Every manager and operator should have one."

He Has Troubles of His Own.

Ben Friedman, New York City, dusts off his typewriter and proceeds to indite the following.

Am in charge of two Simplexes, using 35 amperes D. C. Things went pretty smooth until six months ago, then the grief commenced. After running two months, power projector went out. Either are about half a minute before changing over, with a screen on my light, which was white and strong, producer decided that until picture could be safely seen on the screen at all Trimmmed my leads in lamphouse and put on new lamp holders, more film, more ventilation — all good. Had rheostats repaired without result. I never had to clean the projector, and have not doneso. I have tried different makes of carbon without result. Of 80 ampere fuse runs to projection room, and 60 ampere cartridge fuses on the mains. The former never blows. It is always the latter. Have had to hire different electricians examine wiring, but they have failed to discover the trouble.

At times cannot seem to take hand off feed line, and still Everything has been done. Projectors are pretty well. Bought now lamp jars and tested for grounds, but nothing doing.

I can think of but two things, viz.: Magnetic blow from front, which could not be present with D. C., and anyhow ought to blow the arc out instead of up back of positive carbn, and increased voltage. I would suggest that you attend to these first, then see how high the voltage goes when you have the trouble. Meanwhile, I am submitting this matter to our readers and intend submitting it to the Examining Boards of New York City and Boston just to see if they can dig it up. To me it is a very odd case. There seems to me one bare possibility, viz.: The brother is taking current off one side of a 3-wire D. C. circuit, and when he lights the other there is a connection established with the 220 in such way that amperage is limited but voltage jumps. This might be had through a high resistance ground wire, but whether it would make up the trouble the brother describes I do not know. Let us hear from some of you wiseacres.

Picture Playing a Dignified Profession.

TIME was, when anyone who could pound out "Turkey in the Straw" on a time-worn piano would pass as a good picture player. That time is no more, however, and it is doubtful if such a player would be regarded anywhere in the United States, no matter how backward the community, or primitive the theatre.

Similarly, there has been a corresponding improvement; mere so, perhaps, than in the class of the music, great as that transformation has been.

Today the organist, pianist, or leader of the best playopply theatre is a recognized artist, and the profession itself has become one to be proud of; so much so, indeed, that the very best musicians of the country are entering it.

And there are many reasons for this, for there are few professions which a man may pursue without financial effort on the artist's part, than that of music. The cost of instruction exceeds that of almost any other calling, and the years spent in attaining proficiency comprise a shorter proportion of the average working life than is the case with any other profession, while the returns are, in but few instances, commensurate with the investment.

A music teacher's time is ordinarily worth so much per hour, and the hours of a day are limited; hence there is a limit to the financial possibilities of teaching, and few church organists there are, whose salary as such is enough to meet living expenses. The profession of picture playing, therefore, offers the highest possible returns, financially and artistically, to the qualified musician.

When the moving picture theatre was born no one imagined, unless here and there a stray prophet, that it would become one of the greatest factors in the economic and social life of the country, but such has been the case, and although it is only within the last two or three years that music has been given its proper value in relation to the picture, it is now universally accepted as a vital necessity. From one end of the country to the other the cry is going out for the proper sort of musician; but, alas, the supply is exceedingly limited.

It must be remembered that one may be a very good musician and yet be useless for the purposes of the theatre. The organist to whom a Bach fugue or a Mendelssohn concerto is a familiar joy, might prove an unsuitable future as an accompanist to a feature playing. The pianist who finds no insuperable difficulties in Chopin, McDowell or Tchaikovsky, might "fall down" with the simple score of an ordinary picture. The problem is to provide an artist who might be capable of conducting a symphony orchestra through all the intricacies of a Strauss overture, and yet give no satisfaction to the audience of a "movie" show.

There is something over and above a technical and aesthetic knowledge of music demanded in the theatre; in fact, this something can be best described under three heads: First, and foremost, a strong sense of dramatic values; second, veracity, and, thirdly, repertoire. In brief, it is thorough musicianship plus these three qualifications.

There is an art in playing to the pictures which can only be acquired by thorough instruction and practical experience. The technique of the theatre is the very opposite of that of the concert platform or the church; yet, other things being equal, the one is complementary to the other.

First-class theatres do not want fakirs. The day of the picture fakir is past. What is wanted is a musician in every sense of the word. One who has a cultivated sense of dramatic values in the picture, and the ability to translate and reinforce those values with the music. A player who can transpose a song, or orchestrate it for his orchestra, if need be. One who can improvise either original or given themes correctly and interestingly. A man or woman with a big repertoire of classical and popular music at his or her finger's ends, and the artistic skill to employ it suitably. Above all else, the ability to cue a picture understandingly, arranging a score which shall give the picture life and point, reinforce and support, but which shall at no time obtrude itself to the detractor of the picture, or the story it is telling. Players of this calibre are what theatre men are calling for, and to whom they are willing to pay big salaries.

In fact, the recognition of picture playing as a dignified profession is becoming daily more common. It is not merely an added source of income and musical fields, but in the lay mind of the picture fan. If a picture setting is haphazardly thrown together the patrons are instantly aware of it, and complaints stream into the office of the house manager.

This is not conducive toward the welfare of the negligent or ignorant orchestra leader.

In order to prepare piano players, organists and orchestra leaders for the proper presentation of pictures there has been formed in Los Angeles, California, The Professional School of Picture Playing, having as its principal Brother B. V. Johnson. Mr. Johnson has, for a number of years, been actively engaged in picture playing throughout the country. He has served as organist, pianist and orchestra leader in the most modern of American theatres, and for several years was conductor of the Butto Symphony Orchestra and the Radio Theatre Orchestra, at the same time being organist and conductor of the American Symphony Orchestra and the Radio Theatre Orchestra in Butte, Montana. His individual qualifications are of the highest, while his associates on the faculty are artists of wide experience in picture playing.

And we are proud to link the professional School of Picture Playing is not for the hidden purpose of "plugging" any particular brand of organ or piano. Its aims is purely educational for the purpose of helping to raise the standard of motion picture playing, and make it more worthy of the undivided support of musicians everywhere. We bespeak for it a brilliant future and extend the glad hand of welcome with the assurance of our hearty co-operative and endorsement.

Union Musicians Back Up Their Uncle Sam.

Union musicians of the United States are playing in their highest key for the war aims of the country.

According to Owen Miller, National Secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, they are anxious to do still more, if they can, this great patriotic work.

In the recent Liberty Loan drive the musicians have subscribed to approximately $2,500,000 worth of the reserved bonds. In the second drive they boldly dug into their national and private money chests for nearly $2,000,000, and in the closing campaign they bought an amount closely approaching the later two endeavors.

In the second loan drive the international organization subscribed for $10,000 worth of the bonds and would have taken $75,000 in subscriptions but $20,000 was tied up in a manner that made the proposition unmanageable.

In the Bureau of War's affiliated unions' union, despite the fact that their treasuries were somewhat weakened for local reasons, nevertheless went the limit to stimulate success for Uncle Sam's war bond fluctuations.

And from one end of the nation to the other, wherever men have formed in the parade line to enthe citizens to the big issues before the nation, the union musicians have given of their best in music, service and in money.

The 8,000 members of the American Federation of Musicians can well be proud of the work, well done. They have accomplished for the United States of America in its hours of deepest stress. The nation, too, is proud of the noble band.

Musicians Must Work or Fight.

Considerable diversity has been expressed on proper interpretation as to just who shall be included in the order. The five district exemption boards of Missouri held an all-day meeting in Jefferson City, the capital of the State, June 20, 1918, for the purpose of agreeing on uniform action. This resulted in sending an official circular to all local exemption boards containing nine paragraphs instructing the local boards how to work or fight orders. By Provost Marshal General Crowder, is to be applied. This circular was sent out by Lieutenant Colonel J. H. McCord, who has charge of the enforcing of the draft act.

"Paragraph C of Section 121-K, includes, in addition to ushers and other attendants, all persons engaged and occupied in games, sports and amusemants, except actual performers in legitimate concerts, opera or theatrical performances."

And this means that every professional musician who is not engaged in connection with legitimate concerts, opera or theatrical performances will be forced to enter other vocations or go to the front.

Take Care of Your Piano.

We are in receipt of a letter from a prominent singer who works for a song publishing house, confining his efforts to the city portion called Brooklyn. He complains bitterly about the condition of pianos in the picture theaters. He says he only annually sees pianos that are not kept in tune nor receive any attention after they are once installed.

Exhibitors should take as great care of their pianos as they do of their operating machine. A piano whose keys stick, the upper register is flat and the lower one sharper, while a few notes won't sound at all, is neither ornamental nor useful. It gives the place a black-eye with every music lover who enters the place. Pianists cannot be expected to provide good music unless they have a decent instrument upon which to perform. Singers cannot get results if they are forced to sing with a piano that varies in pitch with every octave (we mean, of course, with every fall of tone).

The remedy is simple and comparatively inexpensive. An instrument that receives six and seven hours continuous playing should be tuned every morning and evening. Regularly keep the piano in tune, and perhaps, a new piano.

Music At the Strand.

During the week of July 28, Harold Edward, of the Strand Theatre, offered an American first with the production of Auber's "Caen, or the "Five Reels." It was followed by "Kati," which was worked over by Massianiello, by Auber, and conducted by Carl Edouard, it continued smoothly and artistically until the organ solo, March Triumphal, by Clark, which closed the evening.

The overture was exceptionally well played, with pretty gradations of tone quality. The rhythm was well marked, and, although the intonation was to have been good, good taste indicated that the entire interpretation was splendid and in keeping with the traditional rendition. A pastoral setting, showing sheep grazing upon the hillside, assisted materially in carrying out the speech and conjuring up the feeling of the overture. It is somewhat interesting to note the historical significance of this overture and the unique personality of its composer.

Daniel F. Auber, a prolific composer of French operas, was born at Caen in Normandy in 1782, died in Paris, 1871. His father, an art dealer, and his aunt, a printer, devoted themselves to the arts and business, and sent him to London to acquire a knowledge of the trade. Auber's irresistible inclination for music, however, manifested itself and in 1841 he returned to Paris, followed by his natural bent. His first opera, "Julie," was produced in 1812. He wrote several operas, among which "Massaniello ou la Muette de Portici," produced for the first time in France in 1816, was composed by the composer, and was his natural bent. His first opera, "Julie," was produced in 1812. He wrote several operas, among which "Massaniello ou la Muette de Portici," produced for the first time in France in 1816, was composed by the composer, and was his natural bent.

The pictorial had a choice selection of music. The early part showing the Prince of Norway, who had been captured by the French, was played by the organ, and Brother Brigham showed great ingenuity in the paraphrasing of the Marseillaise. During the air raids on the churches a splendid piece of music was arranged that proved most effective in contrast. The Oriental music accompanying the scenes of Palestine carried the true eastern atmosphere and won appreciation from the audience.

Maleta Bonconi, a little lady violin virtuoso, showed a considerable dexterity in the playing of "Hijrei Katti," by Hubay. Her bowing is good and her playing pitched as high as her harmonics were exceptionally fine. In her second number "Souvenir," by Drda, which was played on seronino, she showed a breadth of tone which must have benefited her for some years to come.

The feature, "The Border Legion," was accompanied by orchestra without a fault. The choice of music was excellent and the fact that they always remained under the picture proved effective. During the scene between the hero and the heroine, in a lone hut on the plains, dramatic value was enhanced immeasurably by the excellent synchronization of the two.

Following the feature Herbert Waterous, bando, rendered "A Fighting Man," by Capel, in a manner that was truly artistic. We have always maintained that the words of this song was absurdly those who have gained a wide reputation, through good work, is to be strongly desired in the playing of such a fine song. Her performance of the "Bridal Chorus" from the "Rose of the Veld" by von Cowen, then "Traumerle"—Schumann, and "The Coronation March," by Svenden, is the only spot that will give any difficulty. No Photoplay Series is necessary for this picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Select Exchange.

SOUL OF BUDDHA (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme unessential. This is a picture dealing with three atmospheres, Oriental, Scotch and French. You will require agitatos and dramatic tensions as well as a few patheties. When the dancers appear it would be advisable to use "The Eagle's Feather"—Mediator. The entire selection is heavily scored for brass muted effect secure an even balance.

Q. In writing a march is it better to keep the theme in the same key, or is it better to change keys or themes? A. The usual form is to have the trio in a relative key going back into the first key in the coda. Sousa, however, usually holds the coda in the same key as the trio, which is usually a fifth higher than the opening one.
A New Method of Obtaining Dye Tone Images by the Use of Copper Ferrocyanide as a Mordant.

Nature of Positive.

Since the following toning processes intensify the original image, it is necessary to commune with an image of the correct density and contrast. A "medium," positive referred to, is obtained by giving a slight over exposure and a short time of development, but the exact degree of intensification which takes place in any particular case will be learned after a few trials. In the case of lantern slides the best and most transparent tones are only produced on slides of fine grain such as the Eastman Standard Slow lantern plate.

Tone 1. Red Tone.

Positive Employed - Medium.

Tone the well washed positive in the following solutions:

<tr>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Copper Sulphate</td>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ammonium Carbonate</td>

<td>1 gal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Water</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>2 liters</td>

</table>

Dissolve each ingredient separately in as little water as possible, mix the filtered solutions obtained in the order given, and dilute to the required volume. The solutions obtained should be light green in color and perfectly clear. The ammonium carbonate should be almost transparent and free from white powder, and should be dissolved in cold water. The ammonium citrate employed should be neutral. Most samples contain acid, which acid will neutralize the ammonium carbonate, and affect the resulting tone. The free acid is usually citric acid, and should be neutralized with a solution of ammonium using Litus at, as indicator.

Some of the warmest tones are obtained by adding 50% more potassium ferricyanide to the formula.

Life of the Bath.

Use a bath precipitated a brown sludge of copper ferrocyanide and in consequence the required washing. In addition to this, the copper salt will deposit on the metal.

Time and Temperature of Toning.

3 to 5 minutes at 70°F.

Tone of Washing.

10 minutes.

It is important to keep the bath covered when not in use, so as to exclude light, since the bath is light sensitive, while for silver metallic surface should be allowed to come into contact with the solution, otherwise the copper salt will deposit on the metal.

After washing, immerse in the following dye bath.

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Compound</th>
<th>Grams</th>

The method of compounding this bath is very important. Each of the solid chemicals should be dissolved separately in a small quantity of warm water, the solutions allowed to cool, filtered, mixed strictly in the order given, and the whole diluted to the required volume. If these instructions are followed, the bath will be a pale yellow color, perfectly clear, and will remain so for a considerable period.

Troubles in Dye Toning.

(a) Stained highlights are due either to insufficient washing after toning in the copper bath, too strong a dye bath, or an incorrect amount of acid in the dye bath.

(b) Weak highlights. If the highlights do not absorb the dye proportionately, this is due to the use of an exhausted copper bath or one that was not mixed correctly.

Summary.

Lantern slides and motion picture positive film may be toned by replacing more or less of the silver image by a compound of copper, particularly copper ferrocyanide, washing, and then toning the image with an acid solution of a bichrome dye. The copper salt present in the image acts as a mordant to the dye and a toned image is thus produced of a color intermediate between that of the dye and the copper compound, depending on the relative proportions of each. The amount of copper salt necessary to mordant the dye is usually so small that the resultant tone differs but slightly from that of the dye itself.

By employing a mixture of dyes intermediate tones may be obtained, while by combining cyanine with a black and white image of fine grain, very transparent toned images are produced.

The author is indebted to Mr. S. Tulpan for assistance in carrying out the various experiments.

A Glycin Developer.

Glycin is a slow acting developer which keeps for a long time and yields negatives perfectly free from stain. It also makes an excellent positive developer giving a rich blue black print and when redeveloped gives very pleasing aqua tones. Its keeping qualities and close grained deposit recommend it especially for those whose work is in small quantities and infrequent. When exhausted it becomes strongly fluorescent, showing a bluish cast like kerosene, and should then be thrown away.

Try the following formula, and if you find it satisfactory you can easily calculate for larger quantities:

Glycin. 2 ozs.
Sodium sulphite. 5 ozs.
Potassium bromide. 10 ozs.
Water. 1 gallon.

Making the Whole World American League of Nations to Be Realized Through Motion Pictures—London Looks for Principles of Washington and Lincoln to Accomplish These Results
T

HE London Evening News is calling the attention of the English manufacturers to the "domination of the American films." While admitting the great American leadership in moving picture educative control, the English paper pleads for a strengthening of British interests. At the present time the "kings" of the moving picture production are in America, and while American principles are admirable, the desire is expressed that British producers should do more to hold their own, with the intent that future national developments should have sufficient British-American influence wherewith to maintain interest in India, Australia, New Zealand and even Canada.

The particular power of the moving picture in the coming league of nations is expressed as follows: "It is through the cinema that the peoples of the nations of the world will get to understand each other; the moving picture will prove a tremendous power in cementing the projected league of nations which is to maintain a world peace."

In every part of the world where moving pictures are shown the principles of Washington and Lincoln are becoming all pervading, and are scientifically and practically immediately acceptable to the human race, and their propagation is only limited by the limitation of the moving picture, which now in turn seems to be fast becoming unlimited.

It is fairly calculated that 90 per cent of moving picture education is now absolutely American. There are few pictures nowadays in which 'Old Glory' does not get a look-in," says an English writer, and, while it is a little humiliating to British interests to have to admit this, these are times in which the world must be glad to encourage the present spirit of the allied age no matter from what country it emanates the greatest leadership. The two fundamentals of the moving picture are the universal nature of its language and its power of unlimited expansion. These great qualities are the causes of all success, and in this it is no exaggeration to state that the world should have confidence in the future of the world's greatest problems is not surprising. That the principles of America's highest purposes may be thus spread is great cause for educational moving picture congratulation.

"Antigua, British West Indies" (Pathé) 0

NE of the most interesting spots in the West Indies from an historical standpoint, is Antigua. It is the capital of the Leeward Islands, and according to the picture exhibited at the River Theatre, is subject to drought and wind storms. Among the points of interest shown is St. John's with a population of 9000, and English harbor made famous on account of its associations with Lord Nelson. The docks and their prison buildings little changed since the time of the great sea lord are covered in the picture, as well as other ancient relics.

"The Tides of Yesterday" (Educational-Bruce)

Longfellow's poem "The Tide Rises, The Tide Falls" has provided the inspiration for Robert C. Bruce's latest scenic gem. This picture consists of a series of beautiful scenes on the sea shore carried out along the lines of light and shade represented in the poem. It is a picture which will be most welcome to the refined audience.

"An Old World Lesson in Farming" (Paramount-Bray) 4

In the 133rd issue of the Pictograph will be found an illustration of the thrift of the Italian farmer transplanted to America. It shows his practice of tilling every inch of the land that he has bought for a mere song. It also draws attention to the economy of his methods in putting his whole family to work on the homestead.

"Making It Possible for the Blind to Read" (Universal) 8

The printing of the Matilda Magazine established by Mrs. William Ziegler in New York City, and distributed free to 15,000 blind persons in the United States and Canada, is shown in the Screen Magazine No. 84. The working of the presses on which the paper, first dampered, received the raised impressions by means of which the blind read the news and other articles of the magazine is illustrated. It is also interesting to watch the delf maker in which the blind employ to handle the various tasks of getting the magazine together.

"Fine Points of a $10,000 Beauty" (Universal) 8

Farmers especially will be interested in this subject which appears in the 84th issue of the Screen Magazine. A superlince specimen of the Jersey milk cow class is introduced; and when we have admired her to the full an expert points out for us her various excellencies of physique.

IGHT have done better," said V. R. Barnard, manager of the Star Theatre, Cooledge, Texas, "but I am a new man in the business. It was June 3 when I got into the show business. It was July 16 that I ran 'My Four Years in Germany' for seventeen consecutive hours." Arthur James, publicity director for Metro, in his contribution on the subject of advertising and publicity among the other articles printed in The World of July 20, said something. He declared that "unless the exhibitor was willing to advertise his show nobody could save him."

And this is one of the most surprising facts of all. It is also interesting to read in the Texas, at Dallas, dated July 26, he tells us what he did, saying at the same time that he "advertised it good." Here's his letter, which may be of interest to exhibitors who are inclined to balk at what they deem a too heavy advertising expense:

"My Four Years in Germany" was a big success for me. I advertised it good; kept my car on the road six days and began showing it at 9 a.m. and stopped at 2:10 a.m., and the last show began at 12 o'clock in the night and had 221 people to see it that time. People would come out and tell how good it was and they just stood there and waited until they could get in. So you can tell the exhibitors if they want their standing room taken up, show 'My Four Year in Germany'."

GILLSTROM TO DIRECT THE LEES.

Arvid E. Gillstrom, one of the best known directors of comedy-drama productions in the country, has joined the forces of William Fox. He will begin work soon on a production starring Jane and Katherine Lee. The title of the picture has not yet been chosen.

Mr. Gillstrom has had a long and successful career in directing screen comedies. Born in Gottenberg, Sweden, he was educated in the School of Mining, Colorado, and in his youth served as a mining engineer and prospector. His screen career has been almost wholly along comedy lines, and many of the comedy effects which are now in universal use were originated by him.

Howells Representative Discusses Present and Future Outlook of the Film Business in Australasia and the Orient.

Horace T. CLARKE, Australian and Oriental representative of the Howells Film Corporation, has returned from a trip to the Orient, during which he visited a number of foreign countries. He is reported to have had a busy schedule, meeting with film distributors and producers in various countries.

He discussed the current state of the film business in Australasia and the Orient, emphasizing the importance of film production and distribution in these regions. Clarke highlighted the potential for growth in the film industry, particularly in Australasia, and expressed optimism about the future prospects.

The article mentions the challenges faced by the film industry, including the impact of World War I on production and distribution. Despite these challenges, Clarke acknowledged the resilience and adaptability of the film industry in the region.

The article concludes by discussing the importance of film as a cultural medium and its role in promoting national identity and social issues. Clarke emphasized the need for continued investment in the film industry to support its growth and development.

Big Deal Closed for South America

Peruvian Exchange Purchases Rights on Fox, Pathe, Ivan, Paralta and Numerous Special Productions.

The Empresa de Teatros y Cinema, Lda., one of the largest renting and exhibiting concerns in South America, has recently put in practice a plan designed to bring together the Spanish speaking public of Peru, Ecuador, and Bolivia, and the American manufacturers of moving pictures. Eduardo Rodrigo, one of the managers of the firm, arrived in New York about two months ago for the purpose of establishing connections, and will be on his way back to South America by the time this issue goes to press. Following a course much in vogue among Latin-American and European buyers, which is, however, being rapidly eliminated by the modern publicity methods developed in this country, Mr. Rodrigo refused to make any public announcement whatsoever in regard to his New York activities until he had closed his contracts and was ready to leave these shores.

"The contracts that I have signed on behalf of the Empresa de Teatros y Cinemas, Lda.," said Mr. Rodrigo to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "cover as much as a million feet of film and represent an investment of over a hundred thousand dollars. All these contracts will be in force for at least a year.

"We have bought all the Paralta output, which includes the pictures featuring Bessie Barriscale, Lois Wilson, Henry Walthal, J. Warren Kerrigan, Louise Glaum and Clara Williams; most of the five-reelers produced by the Select Company with Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies; the Selkirk productions in six and seven reels; all the Ivan films; 'Les Miserables,' 'When a Man Sees Red,' 'Du Barry,' 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' as well as a large and comprehensive selection of other Fox subjects; practically everything produced by Pathe here and in Europe, and numerous special productions, such as 'Inside the Lines,' 'Hypocrites,' 'I Believe,' 'The Married Virgin,' 'The Reapers,' 'The Master of the House,' 'Liberty,' 'A Man's Man,' and 'The Victim.'

"As you are undoubtedly aware, our firm, besides supplying the exhibitors in general, owns several theaters and controls many others. Some of them are our absolute property, and I mean by this that we own not only the buildings, but also the land. In this connection, I wish to mention the Colon and Excelsior theaters, of Lima, as well as the Cinema-Teatro of Barranco, an aristocratic watering place located twenty minutes from the capital of Peru. In Arica and Arequipa we have just opened the Olimpo theatre, equipped, as all the others, with every modern improvement. One of the theaters we control, the Mercado Street Cinema-Theatre of Lima, shares the honor with another Buenos Aires house of being the only ones in South America giving continuous performances.

"In Chile, Ecuador and Bolivia we have branches and agencies, besides exploiting several theaters, amongst them the Alhambra of Valparaiso, especially built for moving picture exhibitions. This house is doubtless one of the most comfortable in South America.

Warning to Exporters and Producers

Arch G. Kent Calls Attention to Peculiar Transactions Originating in South America and Mexico.

A CONGRESS of film men from Cuba, beginners in the film business, arrived in New York a month ago for the purpose of putting the finishing touches to a deal initiated by correspondence with Sidney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc. The deal—if the purchase of a single plot to be designated by such a high-sounding name—fell through. Like all amateurs, the pseudo-importers from Cuba, after a short week in town, became so suspicious that they were afraid of their own shadows. Finally, the strain was too hard to bear, and, according to Bernardo Herrera, the Chilean reenter, both left for South America to buy America pictures for exploitation in Cuba.

Carlos Callejas, an old-timer of recognized ability in a similar line of work in Cuba, came to New York a month ago, and, after organizing a company under the name of Callejas & Boettcher, secured the rights on most of the Paralta and Vitagraph productions for his territory. Mr. Callejas, with his distributors, has been in difficulties with the local exporters, found conditions very discouraging, and one day declared point-blank in the office of Cine-Mundial that he was thinking seriously of taking the next steamer for South America, as he could get the same pictures there cheaper and without so much fuss.

Arch G. Kent, general manager of the Central American Film Company, holds even more decided views on the subject. He does not hesitate to give details of several transactions that have taken place in the business, of which the concern he thinks responsible for them, which, for obvious reasons, we cannot divulge.

"If the manufacturers and exporters cannot put a stop to this illicit traffic or do not care to do so," said Mr. Kent recently to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "we will simply have to adopt the same method, and buy in the cheapest market. It is no laughing matter to purchase rights at fancy figures in New York while some of our competitors are obtaining all kinds of American film at ridiculous prices from Mexico and South America. The only safeguard we have at the present time are the intricate regulations of the War Trade Board. Thanks to them, we can still live in New York in the good old way, without the constant fear of the pirating of their products turned into a luxury by the activities of the dupers, pirates and the legion of unscrupulous brokers that used to infest the large trading centers of this country. But nothing has been done in foreign markets to curb the activities of these traders and of some firms doing exactly the same thing in spite of their claims to financial standing and respectability.

Here is an opportunity for the Film Exporters of America and the Export Division of the National Association of Manufacturers to prove their usefulness to the industry in general. We all know that this state of affairs cannot be eliminated by legislation. As a matter of fact, even the strongest of the laws are very lax in their application to the film business. The same thing occurs abroad with the added disadvantage that, for weighty reasons of our own, we refused to sign the international agreement on films. Hence, what happened in New York is now being done in foreign markets to curb the activities of these traders and of some firms doing exactly the same thing in spite of their claims to financial standing and respectability.

We consider it a great mistake if our government, and especially the War Trade Board, fail to act in this matter. It is essential that the manufacturers and exporters who have been for years the only ones to export successfully to South America, should be protected by the War Trade Board while other exporters are being protected in this country. Such a state of affairs is bound to give rise to complaints on the part of competitors and distributors who are unable to compete with foreign products in foreign markets.

One of the worst cases of this kind we have encountered was one in which an exporter, the Minneapolis Film Exchange, tried to expropriate all the rights in a certain film abroad by acting as a distributor. The film company, trying to avoid the consequences of this action, threatened to bring the matter before the courts, but the exporter then changed his tactics and is now trying to re-establish his position in the market. The firm concerned with the film is now in a very difficult position and is in the process of taking legal action to recover the rights in the film. The same thing has been happening in other countries where foreign distributors have been trying to prevent other distributors from showing films in their territories.

This is the time, therefore, for the Export Division of the N. A. M. P. I. and the Film Exporters of America to take the necessary steps to prevent any efforts to exterminate this evil, by entering into a hard and fast agreement with governments and countries to deal with any national or foreign concern that makes a practice of going outside its territory or of knowingly trading with parties guilty of such infringements. In a word, what I advocate is a commercial blacklist in the film business. This, in conjunction with the new regulations of the War Trade Board, would place the export business of films on a sound basis."

Foreign News and Comment.

Relations between Spain, France and Italy are more and more strained in the moving picture business. The Franco-British Governments, in the full program of World prohibition against the export of celluloid film, whether exposed or not, to the Peninsula, and the quantity of Italian films imported is rapidly diminishing. American pictures, that were looked upon not so very long ago with a certain amount of ill-concealed contempt as a sort of filler, occupy at present a privileged place in all programs.

To give our manufacturers and exporters an idea of the revision that is taking place in the Spanish amusement world, we reproduce below a few paragraphs from an article recently written by Julio L. de Castilla, editor of "La Vida Grafica.

"We must look to America, the factors that have brought about these changes in the tastes of the public, nor into the advantages or disadvantages they may entail; my only aim is to call the attention of the trade to a condition that exists now and will be real.

"We are still gathering many good Italian pictures, as evidenced by the announcements carried in all the local trade papers; but if there is nothing to complain about in regard to quality, the same thing cannot be said when it comes to quantity.

"During the months of April and May the censorship bureau has examined one hundred and fifty thousand metres (almost one million) and divided as follows: Italian, 50,000 metres; French, 15,000 metres; American, 70,000 metres; Spanish, 15,000 metres.

"These figures speak for themselves."

According to reports sent by the local Cine-Mundial correspondent, the Sociedad General Cinematografica, of Buenos Aires, suspended the release of all new pictures on June 1st. This company has been handling, and is handling at the present time, material in the Spanish Vitagraph, Select and some Triangle productions. It is our belief that this decision was taken to counteract the effects of the temporary export embargo on films that threatened the business with Latin-American countries during the past month, and there is no doubt that normal conditions will be re-established as soon as the Washington authorities lift the ban on the granting of licenses. In point of fact, this has already been done, and, in our opinion, the Sociedad General acted this time in a rather precipitate manner.

David P. Howells suffered the loss of his father, Thomas Francis Howells, at Salt Lake City, Utah, where the Howells home has always been maintained, on Monday, July 29th, after a lengthy illness. The well-known film exhibitor succeeded in reaching his home before his death, but his condition was critical. He will be in bed for several weeks more before Mr. Howells returns to New York, as he has arranged a business trip to Los Angeles before directing his journey back to his offices, which, during his absence, are under the control of Mr. Clark, the Australian representative of Mr. Howells' interests, who happens to be in the United States at this time.

Marcel Morhange, the technical director who left this country about a year ago with Paul Capellani to join the Patlense Film of Argentina, has returned again to Buenos Aires after a short visit to New York. According to the local trade papers, he has purchased the exclusive exploitation rights on all Vitagraph productions for Argentina and Uruguay. The business will be conducted under the name of the New York Film Exchange.

Mr. Graham took with him an assortment of about 100 Paramount pictures and his intentions were to open a branch in Santiago, in combination with some local business men, for the purpose of covering all of the Pacific coast of South America.

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

HERE must be many in the moving picture profession in the U. S. A. wondering at the lathargy of the London Film Co., the producers of "The House of Templerly," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and several other classics of modern English literature, only a few of which were successfully exploited in the States. They need not wonder long, for now that internal dissections in the parent company have been finally allayed the L. F. C. is again about to embark upon new exploits. Sir D. F. Jury has joined the board of directors and the first move is the re-issue on the home market of the old successes of which Jury's pictures are distributed. In the meantime an ambitious new production will be started upon at the Twickenham, or probably another studio. As a successor to "The Manxman" it should do much to restore the bee-feater trade mark to its once unassailable place on our screens.

How often is it that the art of the film title becomes the art of film salesmanship? Apart from intrinsic merits there is one Fox comedy due for early release that has sold everywhere on its label, to borrow a commercial phrase. It is called "Are Married Policemen Safe?" The production, I notice, tactfully avoids a definite answer to the titular query, although the Fox office boy, a reputed wag, tells customers they may have it either in the negative or, and very emphatically (28 points) in the positive.

Capt. Bud Fisher of the Canadian army was among recent visitors to Wardour street. He is now in France and promises novel sketches of the doughy doings of Mutt and Jeff in the trenches.

S. F. Edge of motoring fame and a former financial backer of moving picture enterprises appears once more to be drifting into the industry. He has now become associated with J. C. Bee Mason, the bee king, in a new limited company for taking films of agricultural and natural history subjects. Mr. Mason has for several years been experimenting with the camera at his own bee farms in Sussex and since the beginning of the war Mr. Edge has become celebrated as a tiller of the land.

Sir Jesse Boot, the drug store magnate of the many stores bearing his name, is, I am told, also coming over to the pictures as a field for speculation.

In connection with the issue of the Transatlantic Co.'s next serial a competition for War Savings Certificates is offered to patrons of moving picture theatres. The first prize is fifty War Savings Certificates worth on maturity one pound each.

At last, after many promises, much heralding and more speculations on the causes of its delay in shipment the multi-reel "Mickey" has safely landed in London. The Western Import Co. would have been in an unfortunate position if it hadn't, in view of the many bookings already received. Upon the booking of films in anticipation of their arrival from the States within a specified time London distributors are becoming more cautious. Only recently the Pathe Co. was compelled to cancel thousands of dollars' worth of contracts for its serial "The Mystery of the Double Cross" through the failure of the negative to be guaranteed in time for the original release date of the first episode.

Exchangemen of the Newcastle district have made an emphatic reply to the suggestion that they should only supply films to exhibitors who are members of the Exhibitors' Association. The renters strongly depurate the idea and regard it as an attempt to use them as recruiting officers for the rank of the Exhibitors' Association.

Australian Notes

By Thomas S. Imrie.

HAVING experienced its fair share of vicissitudes as theatre and opera house, church and lecture hall, the Sydney Lyceum Theatre has during the past three months been transformed from a typical "old-time" theatre into one of the most comfortable and artistic photo-play theatres in Australia.

The renovation is mainly internal, and is of the most complete character. In place of the old dressing room entrance which did not admit of any lobby display there is now an open vestibule, with walls cased in beautiful Australian marble, and a broad stairway of dignified proportions leading to a spacious foyer, which extends the width of the building and opens out on either wing to the dress circle accommodations. The old circles, upper and lower, with their numerous supporting columns, have disappeared, and in their place balconies made columns unnecessary, and it may be said in passing that no other theatre in Australia boasts a 64-foot span under these circumstances.

The exhaust system of ventilation has been installed, the plant having a capacity of 33,000 cubic feet of air per minute. By advancing the line of the view circle 40 feet beyond that of the old, the back stalls look up to the foyer and enjoy the advantages of a 30 foot ceiling. The decorations are in the rococo of Louis XVI treatment. Offices and retiring rooms are provided on the foyer floor, and the projecting magazine—two GB Powers—are housed in a fireproof room completely outside the walls of the building.

A deputation from the Theatrical Employees Association asked the Chief Secretary (Mr. Fuller) to amend the Theatres and Publics Acts to provide for an examination of biograph operators and a stricter inspection of theatres, as far as the operating boxes and exit subways are concerned. They contended also that the operator should be provided with an assistant.

Mr. Fuller said that he would have to give the matter consideration before he would say he was prepared to bring in an amendment of the act.

Australasian Films, Ltd., are presenting Ambassador Ger ard's "My Four Years in Germany" at the Sydney Town Hall on Saturday, June 15. The film has been most exalted in it. During the month, several local films of recent construction have been shown, representing indications point to the film being a record-breaker.

The Federal Censor Board has been working overtime lately, and several features have suffered considerably there by. "The Price Mark," and "Scandals" fared badly, the last named subject especially so.

At present all films are reviewed in Melbourne, which causes much inconvenience to Sydney importers. The officials are now arranging for two of their members to be stationed in this city, and censor all local screenings before presentation.

Cecil B. DeMille's "Joan the Woman" is the current attraction at the Sydney Tivoli Theater special matinee. The Tivoli is ordinarily a "legit" house, but recently innovated photoplay entertainments each afternoon, under the direction of Alec Lorimore, chief of Paramount Pictures.

With the object of raising money for the Red Cross Society, society circles in Sydney and Melbourne have each produced a film proceeds from which will go to the fund. The Sydney production is entitled "Cupid Camouflaged," is in four reels, and features local society in all its glory. The initial screening of the picture was given at the Sydney Theatre Royal at prices of 21/-, 10/6, and 5/- (equivalent to your $5, $2.50, and $1.25) and the fact that a crowded house was only opened at these prices is the more marvellous since the picture was not sold at a profit. The Melbourne production, "His Only Chance," was conducted in much the same way, and a similar success has been registered by the southern film.

Practically all of viewing are sufficiently different. Plot, acting, photography and direction are mediocre in both pictures.

The Southern Cross Film Corporation situated in Adela de, S. A., have completed a five-reeler entitled "The Woman Suffers." It is a melodrama of more than usual interest in that the story is being at all times consistent and true to life. The direction, which is such as to make the picture an improvement on the usual local article. Boyd Irwin and Lottie Lyell are the leading players.

"The Waybacks," a seven part version of the Australian novel by Henry B. Fletcher, was released this month, and has instantaneously scored a great success. The film received a great send-off at the Sydney Town Hall, where it was given a matinee. The stage management presented the spectacle of a riot. The ticket seller's voice was not able to cope with the crowd, which became jammed in the passage, and the only way people who had reserved their seats could get through was by organizing a succession of rushes, which, though slightly frantic, were not lack of spasm of relief.

Sarah Allgood, the popular little Irish actress, who has just completed a successful theatrical tour through Australia and New Zealand, is the star of a Quality Feature, to be entitled "Just Peggy." This subject is listed for early release, and will be followed by similar high class subjects from the studio of this new concern. J. A. Lipman wrote and produced "Just Peggy."

Majestic Puts Over a Paralta Play
Portland Theatre Combines with Local Newspaper in Arousing Interest in Bessie Barriscale's "Madam Who."

PARALTA PLAYS, distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, went off with a bang in Portland, Ore gon, where a Bessie Barriscale feature, "Madam Who," was given unusual advertising.

Through arrangement with the Majestic Theatre, running Paralta-Hodkinson Service, the evening Telegram con ducted a campaign of advertising. A week before the W. S. S. drive and also the week the Majestic Theatre was showing J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man." The Majestic management put up a prize of $50 in W. S. S. for the one who could identify a Madam Who, which resulted in a record business at the Majestic for both "A Man's Man" and "Madam Who."

Are Women the Better Script Writers?
Clara Beranger Perhaps Starts an Argument When in Some Detail She Tells Why She Thinks So.

CLARA S. BERANGER, the noted scenario and con tinuity writer now with World Pictures and formerly with Pathe and other well known producers, who has just completed the continuity for "Heart of Gold," a new World Picture, says that women are going to come into the writing end of the picture industry in greater numbers than ever before. The motion picture as an entertainment," de clared Miss Beranger, "is one of the most important features of the American business today. This fact is bound to be admitted if the exhibitors' statistics are to be given the credence they deserve. To appeal to the female patrons the photoplay should attain the femininity that is to be common to the future view and no one is better able to project this angle than women writers.

"It needs no cursory glance at the current releases and those of even six months ago to prove that there are more women in this sex of the scribes. The motion picture is the new avenue, that old truism that love to a woman is her whole existence, while to the man it is a mere incident in his life. This is one of the reasons why a woman writing drama for the screen gives to her story that womanly view which has not been its lot in the past. With this sincerity the audience gets plausibility and probability. Men writers in developing their story have to create artificial emotions which they delude themselves into believing is inspiration."

ROOT STRONG FOR WINNING THE WAR.

At "Jack" Root's Strand Theatre, Pasadena, California, $2,205 was raised in a free will collection for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" in two days. One of the features was Billie Rhodes in "Our Lady Nicotine" during the two days. Manager Root expended $25 in the advertising and you, why, why, why, you, manager Root, why, why, why? Manager Root is busy using his native tongue. Manager Root thinks he has more Liberty Bonds than are possessed by any other Southern California theatre manager.
How the Motion Picture Houses in the Country Towns are Supplying Entertainment the Summer Season

If you look at the map you will see that an automobile trip of 350 miles from Ossining to Albany, N.Y., east as far as Connecticut and the Berkshires, and west along the Hudson River from Albany to Newburgh, brings you in contact with quaint and picturesque small communities. About 25 per cent. of them maintain motion picture theatres, which are open two or three days a week and most of them have surprisingly good programs and well managed houses. The seating capacity of some of them is 125 to 300, with prices of admission from 20 to 35 cents, and occasionally 50 cents, according to the character of the attractions. The average attendance each day is from capacity to capacity and a half. From this we can tell just how much the manager realizes above his overhead. Rental prices paid for features range from $15 to $30 a day and sometimes $75, when run for two days in succession. Of course, rentals depend upon the drawing and advertising value of the picture.

It must not be assumed that these small towns are satisfied with any kind of "junk." They want standard productions, that the graduated and equitable system of distribution in vogue by all well regulated exchanges. They draw their patronage from adjacent smaller communities and the surrounding farming districts.

The heat was summer and we heard only a few complaints which we shall mention later. The managers were apparently not aware of a convention in Boston nor seriously disturbed by war taxation or pending legislation. They paid no attention to business and meeting conditions as best they could. At Katonah we were disappointed to find the manager of the Karonah theatre. G. H. Packard, employed during the day by a large concern in New York City, his wife being in charge of the afternoon performances. This theatre represented an investment of seven or eight thousand dollars in a town of about 1,000 inhabitants. The seating capacity was 200.

Murphy Goes Out and Hires the Town Hall.

At Pleasantville, another small town of less than 2,000, we met our genial friend, George R. Murphy, manager of the Bedford, the only theatre in the place. He told us he was going to quit, because the landlord had raised his rent to a prohibitive figure and he understood Mr. Landlord was going to run the place himself. He has informed us since that he has suddenly decided to fit up the town hall, pledging him their support and patronage. He has consented to do so in acknowledgment of the compliment paid to him and motion pictures.

Sells the Right Dope in Two Places.

Valatie is a manufacturing town and supports the Valatie theatre, seating 425. It has an attractive front and a comfortable, well appointed interior. H. C. McNamara is the manager, and runs the village drug store. He is one of the most successful managers we have ever met, and our cordial reception made our hour's visit all too short.

One of the most thriving little towns visited was Millerston. It is a farming centre and draws from the surrounding territory. Frederick Adams, who is in the garage and automobile business here, runs the theatre and runs it right. He has the confidence and support of the citizens, who appreciate his efforts to keep them entertained and enlightened. The theatre is well run, the seating capacity of 250.

Among some of the larger places we stopped at was Catskill, where C. R. Lansing presides over the destiny of the Irving, 480 seats. This is a regular theatre, running three days. We found Mr. Lansing a wideawake business man who is doing a business commensurate with his possibilities, and is free from complaint about patronage.

At Hudson we called at the Playhouse to see A. G. Elliott, the manager. You all know about the Playhouse. It is one of the most talked of and best managed houses this side of New York.

Todd Has a Most Up-to-Date House.

In passing we put up for the night at Poughkeepsie, where we called on Brother Todd, who keeps his managerial eye on the Stratford, one of the most perfect and modern show houses in this country or any other, for that matter. It seats 1,400 and we understand is capitalised and patronized by members of the faculty of Vassar College and the elite of Poughkeepsie. Mr. Todd is the right man in the right place.

We did not forget to call on the affable G. Cohen, manager of the Dutchess and a couple of smaller houses in Poughkeepsie. Judging from the attendance we saw at the evening performance, he has every reason to be happy.

As we are more or less interested in the welfare of the Moving Picture World, we were gratified to learn that 80 per cent. of the managers we met subscribed for this publication.

Carnivals are a great country attraction to motion picture theatres in these small towns. They usually remain in town a week, and during their stay almost deplete the town of small change and monopolize public attention.

Fox Installs $12,000 Organ in Liberty.

The Liberty Theatre is located at Delmar and Grand avenues, in the heart of the theatre section of St. Louis. The house has 2,000 seats. In addition to the organ there will be several other of the leading ones. Mr. Fox's intention to maintain a high-class picture policy, with Fox productions being given an exclusive first run.

The first production to be shown in the Liberty will be "Salome," Theda Bara's drama of the siren who cost the life of John the Baptist. The theatre will open for the public Sunday, September 29. "Salome" will be shown for an indefinite run.

Thomas D. Soriero's New Departure
Boston Manager Institutes a Profit-Sharing Week for Employees and Shows a Profit in the Dunn Season.

By Epes W. Sargent

BUSINESS DULL? Try a profit-sharing week. Thomas D. Soriero, of the Park, Boston, and a string of houses through New England, finds that it turns a dull week into a paying one and showed to one-third more business than is recorded for any similar week in the history of the house.

Mr. Soriero says he is not a socialist, but that he recognizes as good the chief tenet of true socialism which runs to the effect that the producer of wealth is entitled to an adequate share of the profits. It is management that makes money, but the success with which the managerial schemes are executed is dependent upon the entire force and, recognizing this, he recently declared, in a profit-sharing week at the Park, he will give him justification of his theories, but good business and marked publicity. More than that, he has further cemented the staff into a united force for advancement. From every angle profit-sharing week was a success, both at the Strand, Lowell, and at the Boston house.

It was announced that a portion of the gross for a certain week was paid to the employes, and the announcement was made with an assurance. A marked interest was manifested on the part of the patrons and the friends of the employes.

Checks came in for blocks of tickets and even the holders of season passes kept them in their pockets. When a play is a hit the head head will pay out real money with a pass in his pocket, the golden days are well nigh. More than this, many persons came to the special week merely to give their approval to the idea. They are many in number, patrons of the house, they are believers in practical socialism, and so they even went out of their way to attend the Park instead of the house they usually patronized, and it is becoming evident that some of them have become converted to the Park, for there is an improvement in the average business that followed a box office showing one-third better than for the similar week in any other year of the history of the house.

To give a patriotic angle to the profit-sharing week the employes were paid in War Savings Stamps, and not only did the Government benefit in this respect, but the increased business means higher payments on the admission tax for that period.

It was not intended as an experiment in socialism. It was done with a sincere desire to show the employes that their loyal support was appreciated, but the socialists of the better sort soon took up the impression and went to the theatre. Mr. Soriero has decided to make the profit-sharing idea a permanent part of his policy, and the returns from the first experiment were sufficient to aid materially in holding intact the efficient staff.

Making of 'Hell Cat' a Difficult Task
Many Problems Encountered and Surmounted in Filming Farrar Production in wooly Wyoming.

THE task of producing a Goldwyn Picture twenty-five hundred miles from the studio at Fort Lee, even though the star and company are in the locale demanded by the author, is an undertaking replete with difficulties and unlooked-for expense.

When Geraldine Farrar arrived in Cody, Wyoming, to appear in 'Hell Cat,' by Willard Mack, not even her keen eyes realized the amount of equipment involved in setting the stage for the first scenes of the drama. But soon she saw what had been accomplished.

The two ranches had been rented, one five miles from the town and the other ten times as far, with two auto buses, a motor truck and a touring car to convey the company and properties to and from the scene of work.

Hotel accommodations were awaiting the arrival of the company, including the technical staff brought from Fort Lee, and at one of the ranches 20 horses and 250 sheep were quartered at the expense of Goldwyn, not to mention a score of chickens, feed for which had to be purchased. A half way camp to the ranch was built for the company, reinforced by 20 cowboys, is prepared in Cody and sent to the nearer ranch. At the other place, food for the players is carried over the mountains and cooked in the regular cow wagons.

The matter of building sets is not by any means eliminated because the scenes of "The Hell Cat" are largely exteriors. Ten carpenters were sent from town to construct the interior of the ranch house, which is later to be burned down, and for this purpose $500 worth of lumber was carted over the rocky road from Cody. This is but one of the problems confronting both in producing a play which would have been accomplished with hardly a thought at the Fort Lee studio.

Shipping the film daily is another consideration. As soon as Percy Hibburt, the chief cameraman, returns from location, he is driven by Williams' distance of 25 miles in order to catch the early morning train to New York. But with all this unusual work, everyone associated in making Geraldine Farrar's second Goldwyn production is happy, and the profit-sharing bonuses taken up to the extent of one and a half per cent, in receiving causes of visitors eager to see her, finishes her day with almost as much vim as she begins it.

Johnson Has Studied Children's Ways
World Pictures Director Says Little Folks Pick Up Direction Quicker Than Their Elders.

EFFT JOHNSON, who recently signed contract to direct Madge Evans in "Sung Harbor" for World Pictures, has long made a special study of directing children in pictures, until to-day he is regarded as among the ablest men in the industry doing this particular line of work.

"The directing of children in pictures," says Mr. Johnson, "is a field of endeavor as distinct from the regular work of producing as possibly can be. With children the director is compelled to carry every bit of business in his mind as he goes along. Children will play a scene and ten minutes after you ask them what they did in a particular situation they will tell you they do not remember. With the adult actors the director can have a real rapport with his younger than their elders and are more receptive to the instructions of the director than even experienced actors. Children are not so apt to be self-conscious, and that is why on the screen they can appear more ingenuousness that even the best of stars cannot duplicate.

"There is no reason why a picture with a child as the central figure cannot be as appealing to mature audiences as any photoplay featuring the big names of the motion picture field. Booth Tarkington has made his biggest successes with his 'Penrod' and other 'kid' stories and his readers number a legion among the old-young of this country. Tom Sawyer is a juvenile book, but it is just as interesting to granddad as it is to his little grandson."

A meeting of the committee, which includes some of the prominent figures in motion pictures, is to be held at Mr. Sachs' office at 20 Broadway on Thursday, August 15, for the making of final arrangements.
Exhibitors Co-operate on Exploitation
At Showing of Farrar Production in Cleveland Twenty Showmen Exchange Ideas on Subject’s Advertising.

EXHIBITORS in all sections of the United States are this week seeing Goldwyn’s first star series releases “Our Bridge of Ships.” The pictures have been shown in New York and will make their way to the theatres all over the land territory as well as to the other interesting exhibitors attended an exclusive showing of Miss Farrar’s first production not merely as spectators but as theatre specialists co-operating with each other for the purpose of launching an advertising campaign in their respective Ohio cities.

Among those attending this showing were George J. Schafer of the Schade theatre, Sandusky; C. W. Deibel, general-manager of the new Liberty theatre, Youngstown; H. C. Horater of the Alhambra theatre, and Edward A. Zorn of the Temple theatre, Toledo.

In truth, the meeting was an exploitation conference that had been prearranged for several months—a score of successful showmen having decided that for the first time in picture history they would analyze a picture together and each give the other tips for the promotion and exploitation of the production. Therefore, when “The Turn of the Wheel” is advertised in Ohio the advertising campaign will represent the combined ideas of twenty or more men and the methods of lobby display and outdoor local campaign for the various cities will embody the suggestions of experts.

Shipping Film Shows Answer to Kaiser
Two-Reel Subject Released by General Portrays What America Is Doing to Beat Submarine.

HOW American workmen are “making the stars fly over here” that the Star Spangled Banner may fly on them is graphically told in “Our Bridge of Ships,” the United States official war film, released by the Division of Films, Committee on Publication Information, and distributed by the General Film Company.

“Bridge of Ships” is a twined released by the General and its purpose is to visualize just what American shipbuilders and American shipyards are doing to meet the sub-sea menace of the Hun. It is a pictorial answer to the Kaiser’s declarations that “America will be lightly armed as long as we can sink them.” E. N. Hurley, chairman of the Shipping Board, has declared that America will build 1,600 ships, with a total tonnage, within a year. At the present rate at which ships are building off the ways this estimate will be exceeded.

And, as one of the striking titles of “Our Bridge of Ships” declares, “When the last smoke of this war clears away the entire world will point to the working men of America as the creators of victory possible.”

It has frequently been declared that “when we can build ships faster than the U-boats can sink them the submarine peril will vanish and America will win the war.” “Our Bridge of Ships” shows how this business has been made toward this desired end, and it does it in a way that is at once thrilling, entertaining and instructive.

Kitty Gordon Forms Picture Company
Owner of Famous Back Will Make Six Features Each Year from Pen of Wilson Mizner.

TO provide the luxurious charm and the regal grace of Kitty Gordon with worthy pictorial settings will be, to quote the classification that the inventors of the latest film company to be framed. The output of this company will be known as the New Kitty Gordon Pictures.

With the formation of this company are set at rest all rumors of the actress to turn the laurel-bearing actress to her career and to return to the speaking and singing stage. There are to be six features annually each from the pen of Wilson Mizner, one of the wittiest and most adroit of Broadway’s playwrights. Mr. Mizner is perhaps the best-known writer of a score of red-blooded, all-American works, of which “parked” is one of the best.

The new company is to be Miss Gordon’s only, her business affairs being in charge of Sydney L. Cohan. Her leading man is to be Mahlon Hamilton.

The first of the new Kitty Gordon pictures will be finished and ready for release about the middle of October.

Ruppert to Care for Independents
President of Film Clearing House Says Men With Only a Negative May Club Together.

I HAVE been asked,” says President Jacob Ruppert of the Film Clearing House, “whether the Clearing House would allow the distribution of the pictures to independent producers solely, or whether independent producers may be served too. The question arises for the reason that exchange and program producers have sales staffs that can be easily switched into shipping centers, whereas it is known that the independent producer has no such men, just a negative. How then, is the Clearing House to take care of the individual with the lone negative?

“A number of such independents are arranging to take care of themselves. Their method, in brief, will be to ‘club’ together on a staff of special representatives, while we do the physical distributing. These representatives will be employed in this line of business. In the meantime, we will bring the finger tips full information on what the film industry to-day is pleased to call ‘merchandising.’ They will be in no way connected with the Clearing House—just with the club of independent producers.”

H. Y. ROMAYNE BRINGS FEATURE TO TOWN.

H. Y. Romayne, president of the Romayne Film Company of 2142 Broadway, New York, has purchased the rights to his company’s last product “Me und Gott,” a six reel propaganda feature, for which he is seeking a buyer. The Romayne company is a comparatively new concern, “Me und Gott” being the first picture it has offered to the trade. This subject was directed by Wyndham Gittens, who is in charge of all productions for the company. Mr. Romayne is stopping at the Hotel Astor.

Romayne is allied with Mr. Roman Novak, who is business manager, and Thomas A. Baker who is treasurer, and the son of the founder of Bakersfield, Cal., Phil White, formerly with Kleine, Triangle and Universal, is the head cutter.

The Romayne company has selected as a trade name the word “Bearcat” and its ambition is to make only bearcat pictures.

General Film Company, which is represented in the American forces at home and abroad on active duty by dozens of former employees, was apprised Tuesday of the death of Capt. He was a clever and loyal member of the company.

“ONE TO EVERY MAN” ALMOST COMPLETED.

What is promised to be one of the best pictures turned out by the Frohman Amusement Corporation is now on the last stages of completion under the title “One to Every Man,” by Larry Evans. The picture stars Jack Scribner and Mabel Withiel. Mabel Withiel is the famous seventeen-year-old beauty starring all season at the Winter Garden with Al Jolson in “Sinbad.”

given.

The hostess, of course, reads only the stage names, asking that they be written under each other as a means of spelling words in very few days. The guests are given a half hour in which to place opposite each the real name. A correct list will read as follows:

Mary Pickford........Mrs. Owen Moore
Fanny Ward..........Mrs. Jack Dean
Lulu Mace............Mrs. Thomas Richards
Geraldine Farrar.....Mrs. Lou-Tellegen
Annette Kellerman...Mrs. J. Sullivan
Dorothy Greville....Mrs. R. Barnett
Billie Burke........Mrs. Florenz Ziegfeld
Jane Cowl............Mrs. Adolph Klauber
Viola Allen..........Mrs. R. Slayton
Elise Ferguson......Mrs. Thomas Clark
Alice Joyce..........Mrs. Tom Moore
Nance O’Neill........Mrs. Alfred Hickman
Marie Dressler.......Mrs. James Dolton
Blanche Bosted......Mrs. George Creel

And here is another way of making up an answer list:

I like to watch the graceful form of Mrs. J. H. France.
But lest I waste a thunderstorm,
I speak of Annette Kellerman.

I’m quite devoted to Jane Cowl,
I call her that with pleasure rife, although I know (and do not want to)
That she is Adolph Klauber’s wife.

When Mary Pickford I would praise
I do not speak of Mrs. Moore.
Miss Fagan’s Ina Claire on days
She pictures, doth my heart allure.

And even Fanny Ward is not.
Except when smiling on the screen
When Life’s the play and Love’s the plot.
She’s charming Mrs. Jack R. Dean.

Concerning “The Terrible Face.”

After carefully scrutinizing the frontispieces of the various space hounds who were given a trade showing in a recent issue of the M. P. W., I do not think it is just an' fair to Justin Fair to hand him defered libelous classification.

Moreover, he could not hope to be more than atmosphere when appearing in the same picture with Catherine Calvert.
In fact most our most beautiful he-vampires (in cluding Viola Allen) would be eased into a pulchritudinous Class 2 under similar circumstances.

We might judge from “Katy,” “Soo,” “Helen,” and similars that they get them from box cars.

tion. In a split second good fortune Mrs.
Webster suggested to Katherine Perry, a roof garden actress, that Miss Perry and her mother be invited to the Webster flat while the Harry McRaes were vacationing.

"Use the apartment as its contents are your own," were the last words Mrs.
Webster uttered to Miss Perry as the door slammed on the McRae-Westers. Here’s the rest of the story (with Webster on one end of the telephone conversation some days later and Miss Perry indulging in the Q and A pastime of explaining):
"Did you see the new gents in my apartment after I left?"

"Oh! yes, take a look at "have much to say, and they made such pretty little dresses."

"What’s that—explanation please."

"Why I used them all to make clothes for the poor Belgian ladies."

"You did—who—"

"Your wife—"

"What’s the idea?"

"She said she was to use anything and everything in this apartment if it were my own, and I took her word for it."

"You took my shirts for it," yelled Mr.
Webster.

Just About Now—Five Years Ago.

(Compiled from the Moving Picture World)

Thanksworth Three-a-Week was presenting "Menace of Little Dorris*"

"King Robert of Russia" was coming along from Essanay in two parts.

"Jealousy" was being completed in Morris England by Universit, with King Baudouin in the title role. Leah Baird was Rebecca and Evelyn Hope played Roszina. Who directed? Herbert Brenon.

"The Stampede's Child" was guaranteed to be "a dainty, captivating romantic production" by Solax. Does anyone remember? We'll let all that.

"At the Foot of the Seafold" was the light and frothy outing of the American Kineton Corporation. Just who was finally hanged is not disclosed.

S czy's Summer Time Selections were "wholesome, seasonable and sensational," as per announcement. "The Stolen Moussinets" and "A Mansion of Misery" were listed as "a, b, and z." Even then Thrift Stamps looked promising.

"The Skeleton in the Closet" was Kate's contribution to art. We hereby give it a rave.

"The Gangster's Sacrifice," "The Burning Roof," "The Woman of the Lubin's titles. Perhaps there may be here just an indexing of why Lubin is no longer flashing across the screens on Monday and Tuesday evening these days.

Sam Sycion was writing advertisements for Vitagraph at a little firm believed in getting all the type he could for his boss' money. Sam did.

Ethel Grandin, pretty as a picture, was playing leads in Universit's Gem company.

Willford North, Vitagraph director, was desolate to be here without a line. Yet! The censorship thing was bowing along. Carl Laemmie, W. C. Toomey, of Mutual, and Frank L. Dyer, of Vitagraph, held a meeting—but that was five years ago.

M. L. C. Funkhauser, the then and still well known Chicago executive, is announced that "no space in city hall is being prepared where films may be shown." Funkhauser "got his" last week. The infant industry is progressing.

Francis X. Bushman was located at Ithaca, N. Y., making photoplays for Essanay. To this very day Bushman still gets his name in the papers.

Norma Phillips was listed as "having the newly acquired Reliance players." The New York Sun still remembers her; lately she appeared in "The Mortal Wife" at the Broadway Theatre.

At the Theatre, of which Dorothy Adams is director, Helen Gardner in "Cleopatra" is stated, in all seriousness, to have been four days at the King theatre and Eshonadoth theatre, St. Louis. There's a work for Theda Bergman as one of the leads.

"At the Sign of the Flaming Aves" was about the most interesting department The World was covering. The assistant notes George Blaisdell told how Earl J. Hughes, of Standard Films, was home in Elgin, Ill., getting his watch fixed. Miss Blaisdell had just finished "Cuprice" and was starting "In the Bishop's Carriage" (she was referred to as "Little Mary") then, while Miss Hughes had just finished "Penn of the D'Urbervilles," all of which applied to Famous Players. Then, too, there was William Beaudry, who had just succeeded James Kirkwood with Victor—Kirkwood going back to Biograph.

Warner, president of Warner's Feature Film Company, contributed a "Defense of Three- Reel Pictures." It seemed to be looking bad for multiple-reel producers, at least at that time.

The barn must be filled with part of this year's crop of hay, rye, and oats. Mr. Lincoln left immediately for Blandford station, where a fireproof barn would be built at once.

First Class in Beauty: Stand Up! Metro's publicist declares that it became necessary for Miss Alice Allison's "The Return of Mary," to shoot a scene on the campus of Hollywood high school. The camera was supposed to have done the asking.

The production manager was informed that Metro could obtain the board's sanction to take pictures on the grounds of the school, which is exclusively for girls, on one condition—namely, that a representative of the Los Angeles board, which has supervision over the Hollywood institution, first have a look at the young ladies.

The school board representative motored out to the studio and was presented to Miss Allison and then shown the girls who were to work in the scenes with her. "Forget your good manners," he said, giving her the first glimpse. "I never saw a more splendid lot of refined and good-looking girls. I just knew they would be a benefit to your picture. And, by the way," he added, "you don't happen to need a handsome board official for atmosphere, do you?"

Parked Her Lizard in Bread.

Virginia Chester, blonde and comely, has been parking her lizards in a Universal photodrama starring Mary MacLaren. When she was eager to join the Universal force she confided her ambition to Ida May Park, directing Mary MacLaren. Miss Park told her to make her small part distinctive and await results.

After a hour of deep and painful thought the delicate blonde decided that she would staffergast the company by teaching her pet chameleon to crawl on her head. (Yes, no clock was present.)

All worked well until the little reptile started to change his color. At first he turned red, then green with envy, and later blue when he was picked off and tethered in a hatbox.

In the next picture Virginia will probably have a larger part with a less temperamental lizard in your picture.

The Fate of Feet in a Fete.

On the beautiful lawns of the Letts estate in Hollywood a garden party was in progress. And just as conveniently as that, the director, was rehearsing a scene in "Judgement," an "extra" dashing up the gravel drive, as the camera cooled off. He almost fell into the arms of Bert Dorris, the assistant director.

"If I would have been here sooner," he gasped, "but I had to hunt all over town for these."

He picked it down, and it was Dorris' turn to gasp.

"Your bit of business in this is that of a young fellow with white flannels," said Dorris, "and here you show up with a Charlot Chaplin rig on. What are you wearing those white flannels for?"

Dorris pointed the finger of scorn at the treasurer's costume. "Why I thought you said 'long feet,'" the super explained, "these shoes are the business."

Then light dawned on Dorris. "I said 'lawn fete'—not long feet."

At the Sign of the Good Showman.

P I N C H I N' is a regular game means that someone of previous importance is about to scoff to the shower bath. Find out, folks, for film reviewers mean that the P. H. is about to undergo something closely approaching the Turkish visit.

Not, however, in all cases. Take, for instance, Vitaphograph. Not alone do they play the game in a ridiculous room with commodious chairs, but add, for good measure, a piano player to accompany the feature on its projected screen.

This we style good showmanship. If a reviewer is worth having around and film reviews mean anything in the young lives of distributors, wably chairs minus backs, in scant profusion, chuck into the equation, prove otherwise in some few instances.

Concurrent with their recent nuptials, Bushman and Bayne were, appropriately enough, released by Metro in "A Pair of Cupids."

The Rambler.

You will never know how frivolous this business is until you begin to take it seriously. Come now, seriously, slip us the dops! THE RAMBLER.
Fox Reports Phenomenal Business for "Cleopatra"

THE phenomenal business being done all over the country by the William Fox production, "Cleopatra," which went on a rental basis August 1, has developed the interesting fact that 520,000 persons have already paid to see this great drama of the siren of the Nile.

That this figure is only temporary is shown by the bookings which are coming in for "Cleopatra." A striking fact in connection with these bookings is that many of them are repeat dates, and this despite the fact that the production, at its original showing, played at special prices.

Kunsky’s Washington Theatre in Detroit, for instance, has just rebooked "Cleopatra" for a week, and early reports stated that despite the terrific heat the house is being packed at both daily performances. "Cleopatra" played the Washington Theatre on a percentage basis for five weeks in the spring at $1 top prices.

"Cleopatra" opened in Pittsburgh for its run in the Olympic Theatre at popular prices, and although the thermometer registered 100 degrees in the shade there was no diminution in the crowds that sought admission.

The extended run of the play at the Victoria in Philadelphia set a new high mark for attendance in that city, and the run of the play at the Colonial Theatre, Chicago, will long remain a standard. An interesting situation developed in regard to the showing in Chicago. After the Colonial had given the play a record-breaking run at $1 top prices Miller’s Rose Theatre in Madison street booked it for two weeks. At the end of that time it became increasingly evident that if the management wanted to satisfy the crowds that sought to see the picture it would have to book another week. The print being used by the Rose had been engaged for the next week by another Chicago theatre. The Rose sent out a hurry call for another print, but it was found that all the fifteen prints in the Chicago territory were in use right in the City of Chicago for that week. Accordingly a fresh print was rushed on to Chicago from the Fox home office in New York, the special messenger arriving just in time for the first performance Monday.

Extended runs of "Cleopatra" were also made in Boston, where it played three weeks; Portland, Ore., where it filled the house twice daily for two weeks, and in Milwaukee, where its engagements were repeats; "Cleopatra" having played in each of the cities on previous occasions.

Other cities that have booked this record-breaking production for repeat engagements are Cincinnati, Fort Worth, Trenton, East Liberty, Pa., Columbus, Denver, Camden, Fort Wayne, Cleveland, where it has booked nineteen days’ re-engagement; Reading, Pa., and Battle Creek, Mich.

Outing Pictures Show Old Naval Base.

With the world at war, gigantic fortifications in place at every conceivable point of military advantage, there exists a valuable harbor of demonstrated naval importance equipped with dry docks and docks unprotected save by two pieces of artillery—and nobody to shoot them—unmoored by modern militarism and unconcerned over the world’s turmoil.

It is St. Basons, a tiny island in the West Indies, once the most flourishing port of the western hemisphere, the naval base of the British high seas fleet in the war of 1812. It was from there that Admiral Rodman operated his ships, and it was there that he repaired them.

All that remains is the ruins of the great docks and warehouses, the ruins of the dry docks, the royal governor’s mansion, and the two guns—the "Big Berthas" of their day—the guns which fired the first salute to the American flag under Holland’s recognition of American independence.

These things are all pictured in "Statla With a Past." Outing-Chester adventure picture No. 8, which is released by Mutual, August 15. The interesting island is treated with the same originality and cleverness which has marked the outing pictures and made them stand out as one-of-a-kind features.

Museum of Art Compliments Pathe’s "Hands Up" Poster

The Pathe twenty-four sheet poster advertising the new serial, "Hands Up," which is now posted in every city of any size in the country, has received distinguished mention from one of the most exciting art judges in the world, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. Friday date of July 31 Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., received a letter from the museum requesting that he be sent one of these twenty-four sheet posters on file in its library of commercial art. In this library, it states, it files only the best posters. As the one, three and sixes are of the same high class as the twenty-four, exhibitors are thus assured that the paper they are receiving on "Hands Up" is of a character that will materially aid them in securing notable business.

With the release date still some time off, August 15, the various Pathe exchanges have reported many excellent bookings. As a matter of fact, "Hands Up" starts with a better showing in the matter of business booked than any serial Pathe has ever put out. Pathe has been hooked it for every one of his houses, canceling a competing serial to do so.
Bluebird to Issue Again
Keenan’s “The Long Chance”

BLUEBIRD has rescued from the oblivion which perfor-ence overtakes all things cinema another excellent play. The late Broadway Specials contained a number of good examples of the moving picture art. Among them was Frank Keenan in “The Long Chance,” a thrilling six-reel picture of the West in its most unvarnished condition. It was released three years ago, and had far more than the natural life of a photoplay.
Now Bluebird has decided to reissue it on its regular program, cutting it down to five reels and snapping it up with modern titles and the style which accompanies all Bluebird photoplays.

The reissue of “The Long Chance” is not nearly so difficult as that of many photoplays, because it was one of the first dramas to be produced along what are known now as modern titles. That is, its story wasn’t told in one-two-three sequence. The element of photoplay suspense was interjected in the development.
Half of the story wasn’t told until the last reel, whereas it was formerly the custom to keep the audience in strict acquaintance with the entire action of the photoplay as it progressed.

In addition to Frank Keenan, who needs no introduction to photoplay fans, and who is still grinding them out for their delection, the cast assembled was a strong one, including Stella Bissetto, Fred Church, Beryl Houghton, Jack Nelson, Jack Nelson, Jack Curtiss and Clyde Benson.

E. J. LeSaint made the production, which was written from a continuity contributed by Harvey Gates. In fact it is to Mr.
Gates that “The Long Chance” is indebted for its highly modern technique. Keenan is seen in the character of Harley P. Hennage, written by that wonderful portrayer of Western types, Peter B. Kyne.

“A Sun Kissed Isle” (Post Travel).

“A Sun Kissed Isle” is the title of the Post Travel Series No. 11, released by Pathé Exchange, Inc., the week of August
25. This travelogue takes the spectator through the lovely Island of Porto Rico, showing beautiful scenery, the modes of living of the natives and their industries.

Billie Burke Plays Driver in “In Pursuit of Polly”

IN “In Pursuit of Polly,” her newest Paramount picture, to be released August 19, Billie Burke will be seen for a time as a chauffeur in overalls, who does not disdain to repair her broken-down automobile and who, while engaged in this occupation, is discovered by a millionaire who offers to assist her and later, following a series of the strangest kind of advantages, marries her.

In this picture Miss Burke plays the part of Polly Muranden, a wealthy society girl of New York, who is unable to choose between two men who love her and consequently becomes engaged to both of them at the same time. To extricate her-sel from this tangle she announces that she will give her hand and heart to the first man who captures her, so that she has an hour’s start in her automobile.

As the result of this plan many intriguing situations develop, all of which are diverting, many of them comical and others highly dramatic. In the course of her adventures Polly comes in contact with Hun spies who are seeking to destroy American munition plants. Mason, the millionaire friend of the roadside,
who happens to be a Secret Service agent, comes to the conclusion that Polly is acting in conjunction with these spies as their confidential and he is forced to place her under arrest just as the two suitors reach the scene. It thus develops that, according to the agreement made before the race began, Polly belongs to Mason, as he is the first to have captured her, and he unhesitatingly claims her as his bride.

It is said that there have been few photoplays in which Miss Burke has been seen that have afforded her the support for effective characterization that “In Pursuit of Polly” does. Thomas Meighan is her leading man and others in the cast are Frank Losee, A. J. Herbert, William Davidson, Alfred Hickman and Ben Deely.

Doris Kenyon Breakfasts
With Hub’s City Officials

DORIS KENYON’S first production,
“The Street of Seven Stars,” by Mary Roberts Rinehart, produced by her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., has been its first showing in New England at the Park theatre in Boston during the week beginning Monday, August 12. Miss Kenyon appeared in person at the theatre
Monday afternoon and evening. In honor of the occasion except Manager John D. Soriero arranged to have all of the city officials of Boston meet Miss Kenyon at a breakfast to be given at 10 o’clock on Monday.
In addition to the city officials, prominent exhibitors of Boston and New England also were invited.

Following the breakfast Miss Kenyon, accompanied by Theodore C. Delrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and William L. Sherry, president of the William L. Sherry Service, motored to Lowell, where a lunch was given in Miss Ken-yon’s honor by the exhibitors of that city.
Manager Soriero conducted an extensive advancing campaign in the Boston newspapers on the initial showing of “The Street of Seven Stars” in New England, and has aroused much interest in star and production.

“Prisoners of the Pines” (Hampton).

The first Jesse D. Hampton picture starring J. Warren Kerrigan has been titled “Prisoners of the Pines,” so called because it is a story of the workers in the lumber camps of the far north and so far away from civilization as to be literally prisoners of the trees from which they earn their living. Hampton-Kerrigan pictures are distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.
Ethel Barrymore to Make Maughan's "Lady Frederick"

LADY FREDERICK, the brilliant society comedy by W. Somerset Maugham, has been secured for screen purposes by Metro from Mr. Maugham's American agents. Ethel Barrymore, who introduced the play at the Hudson Theatre, New York, a few seasons ago, with such success, will also present it to the American public by way of the screen, and Metro is the gauner.

Following close upon the heels of another great comedy, "Our Mrs. McChesney," which Miss Barrymore has just completed at Metro's Sixty-first street studio, the acquiring of "Lady Frederick" is in line with the firm's program of presenting this star in a screen series of the productions in which she has most strongly endeared herself to the public, namely, in brilliant, sparkling comedies with underlying heart interest. Miss Barrymore has played successfully on the speaking stage both "Lady Frederick" and "Our Mrs. McChesney," the latter being an adaptation of the famous Edna Ferber stories, dramatized by the author and George V. Hobart. Further stage comedies will be added to the list. Herbert Blache will direct Miss Barrymore.

"Geezer" Goes Over Big in Chicago.

"The Geezer of Berlin," the travesty on "The Kaiser, the Heast of Berlin," which Jewel put out, has had its first test and has come away successfully. Jewel officials were so fed up on "The Beast"'s success that they had come to think there was only one picture of the class. To have a two-reeler keep right on where "The Kaiser" left off was more than they had dared hope.

Mrs. Emma Cohen, manager of the Casino Theatre, at 58 West Madison street, the heart of Chicago's Loop district, saw "The Geezer of Berlin" in the Universal Exchange projection room and without arguing about the first-run price booked it on the spot. She used an elaborate advertising campaign prepared by the exchange publicity department, and Irving M. Luck saw to it that all the Chicago reviewers were there. In spite of all high priced competition "The Geezer of Berlin" got the tops, the cuts and the best reviews.

Affiliated Issues Booklet

Giving Detailed Analysis

A SIXTEEN-PAGE booklet under the title of "The Exhibitor Dominant," has just been issued by the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation and is being mailed to the members of the various Affiliated units throughout the country.

The book explains in detail the platform of exhibitor-controlled co-operative booking as worked out by the Affiliated plan, and contains an interesting chart of the benefits derived by both exhibitor and producer from this method of film distribution.

The question of the savings effected by exhibitors through grouping their booking power is treated by specific illustrations. How the funds of exhibitors are at all times kept under their control; how pictures are selected; how quality productions are assured; how the producer is protected, and how waste is eliminated are some of the topics discussed in the booklet.

"Regardless of whether an exhibitor becomes associated with the Affiliated he owes it to himself to weigh carefully the material presented in this book," said Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated, in commenting upon the publication of the work.

"So far as I know there has never before been published a treatise which outlines so comprehensively just how far-reaching is the power of the exhibitor. It is not a revolutionary nor radical argument, but a sane, constructive discussion of the part that the exhibitor can and should play in putting his own business and the business of the industry as a whole on a sound, efficient basis, through the medium of co-operation."

Exhibitors not members of the Affiliated units may obtain copies of "The Exhibitor Dominant" through the national director of the Affiliated in their territory or by writing to the Affiliated offices in New York.

"A Law Unto Herself" (Paralta).

Paralta announces the completion of the fourth Louise Glau play with that company, "A Law Unto Herself." Miss Glau has the difficult part of portraying three different periods, each ten years apart. The locale of the story is the Champagne district of France, and the time 1894, 1904 and 1914. There is a background of war and preparation for war that furnished the fabric upon which the drama is woven.

Francis Paget supplied the original story and working synopsis. Mr. Paget is a new author in the screen world and the story of "A Law Unto Herself" is the first one he ever submitted. It was accepted immediately in preference to other scenarios which had been considered and Mr. Paget was brought out from his home in Montana to the studio, where is is expected he will write other stories for the star. The screen version was written by Jack Cunningham.

Wallace Worsley produced the play, which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.
Jewel's Anti-Yellow Dog Campaign Is Spreading East

The practical "win the war" campaign planned by Jewel, Inc., in connection with the visualization of "The Yellow Dog" has traveled to the South and is being spread. So far it has been conspicuous and grown to such proportions that the greatest expectations of the company have been surpassed and Henry Irving Dodge, author of the now famous story and founder of the anti-Yellow Dog agitation, says his fondest dreams have been more than realized.

In addition to the chambers of commerce and patriotic societies that have already been reported as sponsors of the campaign in various cities many great newspapers have taken up the work of organizing the boy power of their towns in co-operation with the leading picture theatres.

In all cities this plan has been reversed by the most prominent exhibitor assuming charge of the campaign and securing the co-operation of the newspapers in his territory.

This latter plan gives the widest publicity to the movement and makes possible the fact that every phase of the campaign that is suppressing the destructive influence of Hawaiian propaganda is free of commercialism and is in no way associated with the picture that will later be released to the public after many yellow dogs into incorporated patriots.

One of the biggest Anti-Yellow Dog clubs in the country today is in Dallas, where the Dallas Morning Post, "Whooping it" the drive in association with the leading picture houses and legitimate the campaign.

A big street parade in which over one thousand members participated was conducted by this paper, and after being reviewed by the Mayor, Joseph E. Lawther, and Harry Olmstead, of the Council of Defense, the paradors were presented with membership badges that were honored by admission to the Old Mill theatre at a special performance. Other special performances have been given as part of the big Yellow Dog rallies and still others are planned to keep the campaign in Dallas going.

Western Photoplay's Serial Named.

Golden of the Western Photoplays, Inc. has been settled upon as the final selection for the serial in which Miss Baird is being starred. A majority counted in favor of the choice originally placed on the serial as being the most appropriate and the most interest compelling.

"The Messenger of Death" is the title of the coming fifteen-episode serial.

WHILE the oppressive hot wave was breaking all heat records for New York City, Goldwyn was setting a new mark for motion picture realism. The biggest relief work is "Perfect Lady," from the successful stage play by Channing Pollock and Renold Wolf. The play is popularly known as Augustin Daly, playwright and producer, achieved his biggest successes and the scene of Ada Robertson's home. At the last minute years ago became a burlesque house for the three days the Goldwyn players used it—1918's late year success.

One of the scenes required eighteen chorus girls. They surround Miss Kennedy, who plays the role of Juliet, leading woman of the troupe. In the audience were three extras applauding the "work of Juliet." Also in the audience were four prominent members of the cast posing as members of the Starlight League, one of them being the sheriff. The latter, urged by other members of the committee, orders the curtain lowered because of the apparent vulgarity of the show, and then tells the audience to find it to the box office for its money.

Because of the intense heat, Goldwyn had a cooling plant installed at Daly's Theatre and fish tanks four tables wide set the length of the lobby and food was brought from a nearby hotel. Jere Austin, Miss Kennedy's leading man, acted as host in the garb of a clergyman, the role he plays in "A Perfect Lady." A sixteen-piece orchestra was engaged for the theatre scenes made music for dancing between hours of work.

Columbia, a trip to the Gulf Coast islands off Louisiana, side tours among the pine and mountain streams of upper Canada, and again among the Florida Everglades. Intimate housekeeping arrangements of native tribes in remote and nearly inaccessible parts of the world are revealed in this series.

Alma Rubens and Harry Mestayer Lead Triangle Aug. 1

Alma Rubens is an Italian girl, Gailia, a character which should conform admirably to her brunette type. Several new players are included in her supporting cast, among them being Charles West and Emory Johnson.

Frank Frazzle, who directed this production, is said to have furnished one of

Ralph Ince to Direct Hamilton

George Randolph Chester's story, "Five Thousand an Hour," the scenario of which has been made by June Mathis, has been decided upon by Maxwell Karger as the initial picture for Hale Hamilton as a Metro star.

"Five Thousand an Hour" is one of the cleverest of the George Randolph Chester stories and its leading character is a typical Hale Hamilton part. Mr. Hamilton will create the role of Johnnie Gamble, a conquering financier, who goes through many escapades, and whose career holds one amusing situation after another, but who eventually cleans up a crooked business deal and wins out. Many scenes of unusual beauty and interest will be incorporated in the picture, among them the racing at Saratoga, a prominent country club and prize kennels of a dog fancier.

Ralph W. Ince will direct. Assisting is William W. Cohill.

The first scenes for "Five Thousand an Hour" will be taken at Saratoga and will show many of the world-famous places of note in that city—the springs, the picturesque old hotels, homes of our political conventions, the races and numerous other features, Augustin Daly. He has also appeared in productions of Klavus & Erlanger and Henry W. Savage.

It's Chauffeur Moore in Goldwyn's "Thirty a Week"

WITH "Just for Tonight," his first Goldwyn starring vehicle being shot at Goldwyn branches throughout the country. This review is at work in the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee on his second production as a star. It is "Thirty a Week," from the successful stage play by Thompson Buchanan, and is expected to add to its place among the group of pictures more suited than that afforded by his first production.

"Thirty a Week" is being directed by Harry Beaumont, engaged especially by Goldwyn to supervise the Tom Moore production. Beaumont's success as a temperamently directed direction of the "Skinner" pictures—"Skinner's Dress Suit," "Skinner's Baby," and other films especially well fitted to handle Tom Moore. He and the star are in accord in believing that "Thirty a Week" will be a whirlwind of adventure and fun.

The play tells the story of the romance of a young American producer whose salary is thirty dollars a week, and who falls in love with and marries the beautiful newcomer. These three players, in the opinion of the Fox Corporation, typify all the verve, electric force and smash that are making themselves felt on the Western front.

Tom Mix is the West, with all its daring, its breezy, devil-may-care life; when his rides he visualizes the bravery and hardihood of the men who Hewed a civilization out of a wilderness.

And then there is George Walsh. All that is fine and wholesome and splendid in young America is embodied in this actor's work. He is athletic, like all good young Americans—clean-limbed, happy, bubbling over with life and vitality.

Goldwyn is the typical American woman. She has fine force and high tension temperament. And her plays stand out for these very qualities.

Farnum Finishes Second Grey Story.

William Farnum has completed the filming of "The Rainbow Trail," the Willam Fox picture taken from Zane Grey's novel of the same name. The film has been cut and assembled and will be shipped to New York shortly for inspection.

Congenial Role for Kerrigan.

F. McGrew Willis, author of J. Warren Kerrigan's "A Baby for a Star," released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation early in August, has provided Mr. Kerrigan with one of the most congenial roles the screen star has had.

Lois Wilson is seen as the heroine. She has appeared with Mr. Kerrigan in a number of his pictures and has gained popularity by reason of her comeliness and artistic ability.

The picture is based on a magazine story, "Above the Law," which was written by Max Brand, and was directed by Robert Thornby, being Mr. Thornby's second picture for Fox.

There are only three principals in the cast. Besides Miss Carmen, who portrays the role of Labelle Geraldine, fresh from the vaudeville stages of Broadway, there are Henry Woodward, who appears as Black Jim, a bandit chief, and Edward Heurn, cast as Freddie Montgomery, who has a yellow streak wider than a Staten Island ferryboat.

Scenery of striking beauty is declared to be a feature of the play, as many of the scenes were taken at Huntington Lake, California, 5,000 feet above sea-level.

Otto to be Lockwood Co-Director in Yorke-Metro

Henry Otto will again direct Harold Lockwood in Metro productions. Mr. Otto returns to the Metro fold after a two years' severance of relations. During the time of his previous affiliation with Yorke-Metro, Mr. Otto was credited with the production of what proved to be among Mr. Lockwood's most successful early vehicles. It was Mr. Otto who put on "The River of Romance" and "Mister 44."

While no announcement has been made to such an effect, Mr. Otto's engagement may nevertheless presage the appearance of Mr. Lockwood in more vehicles of the type of "The River of Romance" and "Mister 44."

According to the agreement Mr. Otto will alternate with Managing Director Edwin Carewe in the making of future Lockwood pictures. He will take over the star immediately after the final scenes of "Palm First" have been made and will start "shooting" at once while Mr. Carewe is engaged in the task of cutting and titling his production.

Mr. Lockwood and Mr. Otto were fellow players with The Selig Company in the days of one reelers. Mr. Lockwood appearing in leading roles, while Mr. Otto played heavies. Another spectacular water feature he produced was "A Modern Lorelei," starring Tyrene Power. His most recent engagement was with Triangle, for whom he directed features starring William Desmond.

Before entering screen work Mr. Otto appeared in vaudeville and on the so-called legitimate stage besides filling engagements as stage director. For a long time he was stage director for Henry W. Savage.

United To Distribute "The Light of Western Stars"

HARRY A. SHERMAN, who for the past fifteen years has been a force in the New York movie trade, ranging for the distribution of his company's first production, "The Light of Western Stars," announces the consummation of arrangements by which this picture will be released by United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., and will be their first offering to theatres comprising this organization. Further, Mr. Sherman announces that after viewing this production the United has contracted for six more features starring Dustin Farnum, who is the star of the first release, and will pass upon the type of stories before the work of production is begun. Two of them are already been "done" (phrasing it) the second series being "The Wolf Breed," by Jackson Gregory, and "The Man in the Open," by David P. Drury.

A Western feature that is not stereotyped in form ought to be welcomed. It will probably be good news to many, therefore, to learn that a thrilling Western feature has been made from Zane Grey's novel, "The Light of Western Stars," and one which differs greatly from the usual thing in Western drama.

Dustin Farnum is seen in the role of Gene Stewart, the reckless, lovable cowboy, who is largely patterned by the author, originally patterned his character of Gene Stewart after Dustin Farnum, and actually says so, hence it is quite appropriate that Mr. Farnum should play this part.

In a general way this story is an epic of the Southwest. All of the scenes were taken at the original locations described by the author. The story is laid in Mexico, New Mexico, and Arizona. The photograpy was done by Homer Scott. In doing these scenes many hardships were endured by the company.

While there is no lack of thrilling Western action in the story, "The Light of Western Stars" is by no means a conventional production. The redeeming feature of this film adaptation is said to be the fact that there have been no liberties taken with the author's text. The original story is practically intact.

Hold Private Showing

Of "Lafayette, We Come"

A PRIVATE showing of the first production of the Perret Producing Company, the much heralded patriotic film "Lafayette, We Come," was held recently for the executives of the company, Director Leonce Perret and his staff, at which time F. Du Fourno, one of the directors, spoke as follows:

"It is said of the motion picture and its entertaining and educational values that the surface of these possibilities has merely been scratched. If this be true then it has fallen to the lot of a Frenchman to be the first to dig down under this surface and bring up a specimen nugget incrustation of the priceless ore which lies hidden below. True, there have been produced motion pictures which have thrilled audiences and will live long in their memory, but never before has a motion picture so ingeniously sown the seed which when ripe now will for all time bind two nations—France and America—in a bond of mutual understanding, fraternity and love. Those of you who have aided in this project realize the truth of my words." Mr. Perret's sales organization are busily engaged negotiating for the disposition and release of the film to be preceded by a showing on Broadway. Announcement of the completion of these negotiations will be made shortly.

"Sporting Life" Announced For Release in September

MAURICE TOURNÉUR announces that "Sporting Life," adapted from the famous Drury Lane melodrama, will be ready for release early in September. The releasing arrangements are in the hands of Hillier & Wilk, Inc.

"Sporting Life" is the first production of the Maurice Tournéur Productions, Inc., and the first offering in his own name of the director who made "The Whip," "The Blue Bird," "A Poor Little Rich Girl," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "Trilby" the first four Elsie Ferguson pictures and other noteworthy productions. Mr. Tournéur selected "Sporting Life" because it was one of the biggest successes of the famous home of melodrama, the London Drury Lane, because it was also a New York hit, and, like "The Whip" it is a romance of the turf, being woven around that famous British sporting classic, the Derby. It is also by the same authors as "The Whip." Mr. Tournéur is said to have spared no expense in making "Sporting Life" into what he believes to be the best production of his career, and he is still engaged in revising, cutting and proving it, although he is also now working on his second production, "Sporting Life" will leave my studio absolutely perfect in so far as I can make it so," says Mr. Tournéur. "It will be as I want it in every detail, down to the smallest caption. I have put my whole heart into 'Sporting Life' and I am putting the greatest care into every last inch of it.

"Sporting Life" has a carefully selected cast, including Constance Binney and Fair Binney, Willette Kershaw, Ralph Graves, Warner Richmond, Charles Eldridge, Charles Craig and Henry West.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., are already in receipt of a number of inquiries regarding "Sporting Life," from all over America, as well as Australia and India, where the melodrama was equally well known as a stage hit. Bookings are now being arranged, following the definite announcement of early September as the date of release.

“Little Women” Is Announced As Second Brady Feature

THERE second big special independent production made by William A. Brady is rapidly approaching completion. The subject of this, which is a well-known novel, “Little Women,” one of the most widely read books ever published, is the life of the March sisters—Amy, Meg and Beth, the gallanties of Laurie, the faithfulness of John, the heroism of Mr. March, as well known in Great Britain and other countries as in the United States.

Mr. Brady was made to secure the screen rights to this production, but it remained for Mr. Brady to persuade the Alcott estate to consent to the making of the picture; incidentally, it was Mr. Brady who made the very successful stage production, which ran in New York for eighteen months and then enjoyed a phenomenal tour of the country.

The picture will be produced under the direction of Harley Knoles, who has chosen for the location, scenes in and around the home of Miss Alcott at Concord, Mass. The house in which she lived has been preserved by the state of Massachusetts as a memorial, and Mr. Knoles is using in the picture, the rooms in which she lived in the actual making of the story, also the famous Plumfield Orchard. To those who know “Little Woman,” the picture should prove very attractive.

While it is quite a jump from the sensational “Stolen Orders” to the beauties of “Little Woman,” this is in line with Mr. Brady’s policy of choosing great and popular subjects, and as his third independent production, he will film “Way Down East,” which as a theatrical attraction has been a success for nineteen years been before American audiences.

All of these productions will be sold on a territorial basis.

Schlaifer and Standard Announce Several Ivans

Shipman Handling Frazee’s Two-reel Mystic Mysteries

UNDEER an arrangement with Edwin A. Frazee, the Frazee Film Productions consisting of two-reel mystic comedies, is being handled on the open market by Ernest Shipman.

Mr. Frazee, who is responsible for several Keystone successes, such as “Crooked to the End,” “A Village Vampire” and others, states that the time has come to institute a distinct departure in the making of comedies, and that the introduction of illusions for which he has patented protections, will form a part of each story, rivalling on the screen the work of Keller, Carter, and Hermann on the stage, but that no expose will be made as to how the various illusions are accomplished.

The first production, “A Haunted House,” has been completed and is booked for a run at W. H. (June’s) Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles.

Lieutenant Hall Featured

In Film Based on His Book

CARLE E. CARLTON, president En Fair Cinema, Ltd., announces active work has been going on for the past seven weeks in the production of En Fair, or “Fighting the Hellish Huns in the Air,” adapted from the book of the same name, written by J. H. D. Hall, of the Lafayette Escadrille.

Harry Reiver, the director of the last two Mitchell Walker productions, is directing this picture, which, it is expected, will be ready for release about September 15. In the cast, will be planes, observation balloons, etc., persons experienced in flying in the air are said to be vividly portrayed.

A scene of approximately 600 feet showing actual battle in the air taken by Lieut. Hall’s observer, including the destruction of an enemy plane, is a chief point of interest.

The United States Government is said to be co-operating with the producers in the use of battle planes, observation balloons, and hydro-aeroplanes. An observation sausage balloon in which Lieut. Hall and Miss Diana ascend is destroyed in mid-air through an attack by hostile aeroplanes.

The production will be released in approximately eight reels for the state rights market. An advertising campaign has been inaugurated in conjunction with the release of Lieut. Hall’s book in a great number of newspapers.

In Chicago, a two-reeler, “A Message” to the door of a Loop restaurant, was discovered by Uncle Sam’s sailors, who covered it with the stars and stripes. Among other interesting items in this number is an Auto Polo game at Independence Park, New York City James Montgomery Flagg, the famous artist, re-executes his poster “Tell that to the Marines!” in the presence of thousands on the steps of the Public Library. The Marines at Erie Island expressed, and the American Red Cross held a happy reunion in Paris, with Uncle Sam’s soldiers marching through the Place de la Concorde, waving their flags around the Champs Elysee. The appearance of American Red Cross nurses was greeted with just as many cheers.

Effective Courtroom Scene in Fifth Petrova Picture

AN interesting and effective scene in Madame Petrova’s fifth special production, “Women,” represents the interior of a court room during a trial. The set, which was modeled on the New York court house, is of great value and has been very popular among spectators who have had the opportunity of seeing it. The Petrova studio was last utilized, and has been greatly improved. The Petrova staff to have been used as spectators, court attendants, jury, etc.

The court scene, which is a cooperation of an expert stage manager, Director Ralph Lacey has introduced a novelty in the taking of testimony, and is a true court case. The actor who plays the role of a juror is the only one whose face is visible for the entire event. At the conclusion of the testimony, a complete rendering of the witnesses is read aloud in the presence of the trial, and this is photographed on a background suggesting the atmosphere of a court in general.

Elliot Makes Record Building a Theatre
Kansas City's Old Sapphire Torn Down and a New House Built Between June 6 and August I—Will Seat 450.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway, Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—A. E. Elliott holds the record for the setting up of a moving picture theatre. For the past five years Mr. Elliott has operated the Sapphire theatre at 115 East 12th street. The lease expired the 1st of June, and on May 4, 1918, Mr. Elliott took a lease on that property and on the adjoining building. June 6 the work of tearing down the Sapphire theatre began and Thursday August 2nd witnessed the opening of the new Elliott theatre in the same location.

The house, which is 38x37 feet, and has a seating capacity of 450, is finished in cream and brown, with red, white, and blue emblems as the motif in the centre of the panels. A feature of the theatre is the projection booth, which is one of the best in the city, being 15x25x2 feet, with an eight-foot ceiling, and operating the very best De Luxe Motograph machine. The lighting is indirect, and the music comes from an American Photophone. Admission is 10 cents plus the war tax throughout the house. Progress is made mainly of features and comedies. Mr. Elliott has contracted for the first run on Triangle, with a twice a week change. Indiana Trade Letter.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Lany Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Indiana-Gallipoli was in semi-darkness for two nights, beginning two weeks ago, in compliance with a Federal order issued by the Federal Government. Local exhibitors say they did not notice any difference in receipts over the two lightless nights, but they are expecting a decrease on these nights later on. According to the observations made by the exhibitors when the lightless nights were in vogue last winter, there are not nearly as many people on the street on lightless nights as on other nights.

The exhibitors, however, are not complaining of the situation in the least. They say there were more who make any sacrifices that will aid in any way toward the winning of the war.

The large asbestos curtain has been replaced and the stage flaps are white with black and has the appearance of a large velvet tableau curtain. The projection booth is the best in the state. The interior construction is to be of iron and cement, and the outside will be made of metal lathing and there will be no asbestos plaster. The booth will be one of the most complete of its kind as to machines and other equipment, according to Fred Tangleman, who has charge of the work.

Some Recent Film Shows

S. KAYVILLE, WASH.—"The Finer of Justice" has been drawing such unprecedented crowds to the Rex theatre for the last few weeks that John Hamrick has decided to hold it over for a third week, even if he has to pay for the film rental and advertising of other exhibitors who have booked it for that time.

Everett, Wash.—Everett was one of the smaller cities of the country where "The Unbeliever" was put over in a really big way and where the results fully justified the effort. S. P. Totten, manager of the Star, where the feature was booked to run, arranged to have ten marines come over and send them around town in two automobiles firing blank cartridges. Immediately telephone inquiries began pouring into the newspaper offices and the theatre as to what it was all about. The results were capacity business for the theatre, $300 for the smoke fund—and the loss of the operator, who hurried into Seattle the first thing next morning in order to release his enlistment in the Marine Corps from Everett.

Wenatchee, Wash.—The Wenatchee theatre has been turned into a home of motion pictures within the last month, W. L. Sneed, who took over the theatre last fall and who operates the Gen, a motion picture house in Omak, Wash., met the same fate when he first came charge of the Wenatchee. He reports a record business, especially the first four "Four Years in Germany" and says that he is going to make a specialty of films of that nature at this theatre.

Seattle, Wash.—The entire eight reels which compose the program at the Strand this week are released through Pathé. The feature is a Pathé special. "More Trouble," featuring Frank Keenan. Then there are Pathé comedy, a Pathé scenario and the British official war film "Britain's Bulwarks."

Higher Admissions in Detroit Probable

Exhibitors See Necessity of Getting on a War Basis at Once—Salaries and Other Expenses Are Going Up.

By Jacob Smith, 779 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—If ever in the history of the motion picture industry exhibitors were required to study their business and to adjust themselves to new conditions it is right now. With the proposed increases in admission taxes as well as increased taxes for exhibitors themselves, it is very essential that exhibitors immediately prepare to "get on a war basis." This is no time for thinking of the past; there is only one thing left for exhibitors to do and that is to act quick. If their scale of prices needs boosting there should be no hesitancy to boost. The public will pay the boost—they expect to pay increased prices to the theatres just the same as they are paying it to the baker, coalman, grocer, and every other retailer. Should the exhibitor think his prices should remain still when his own cost of business is increasing?

In Detroit the union motion picture operators are demanding increased wages of 16 to 17 per cent. The present scale expires on August 31, and the new wage scale is to be effective September 1. The increase will amount to approximately 25 cents per week. To the John H. Kunath Enterprises, with its ten theatres, the increase will amount to in the course of the next twelve months of from $2,500 to $3,000.

Everything the exhibitor buys or owns will cost him more.

In the exhibitors' next move. We sincerely hope that no Michigan exhibitor will hope to stay in business and leave 1917 and 1918 prices unchanged. It simply cannot be done.

What's the outlook for fall? many people in the film business ask.

Summing up the situation as we see it, there is a cause for alarm. The country is prosperous—no one can deny that— the various cities of importance are pretty well filled up, and wages are still higher in the fall. People must have amusement and can not afford any cheaper amusement than motion pictures. Theaters are giving better attractions than ever before and people who are slightly advanced are certainly not going to give up their cheapest and best entertainment, are they?

Exhibitors have it within themselves to make business good or bad—depending on whether they are good showmen.

McElroy Believes in Specials.

Blair McElroy, of Pittsapatk & McElroy, who operate extensively in Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin, was a Detroit visitor on August 3, "Mac" was accompanied by Mr. Miller, the architect and construction manager for the circuit. "This fall the picture business will be a day-to-day proposition and the exhibitor will have to be on his guard every minute," said Mr. McElroy. He must watch himself and not tie up his theatres totally in order that he may have time to play the number of big specials which will be on the market.

Educational Film Moves

Harry Abbott, representing the Educational Film Corporation, has moved his headquarters to 682 University building. The entire work of distributing Educational films will be up to the Standard, while the sales in the Pacific will be entirely up to Mr. Abbott.

State Film Age in Changes Hands.

The State Film Company, Film building, Detroit, formerly owned by Co. W. S. C. Miller—sold later to Messrs. Jack Ryder and Peter L. Smith—has been sold again to Samuel Ludwig, of the Victor Film Company, who has already taken possession. "Civilization," "The Masque of Life," "A Mormon Maid" and "The Greenback" are a few of the pictures owned by the State Film Company.

Items Worth a Glance.

George Lightman, recently of Cleveland, succeeds G. Cliffe Reid as Detroit manager of the Parex Film Corporation, which leases William L. Sherry pictures.

Films Prove Their Value

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Not to every mother who has given a son to his country's service is given the opportunity of receiving a decoration for valorous service with the American expeditionary forces, or decorating him at home, but if she ever gets a glimpse of "sonny boy" taking a shot at the Kaiser's hordes with one of the pretty little French '15s.

But such opportunity has been afforded several Nashville war mothers who have sons serving with Gen. Pershing's force overseas.

During the showing of some war scenes in connection with the Hearst-Pathé weekly at a local picture house recently Mrs. Edward Hughes, his mother, Lieut. Edward Buford, Jr., of the American air forces, receive the decoration of the distinguished service.

Last week at the Princess theatre Mrs. Charles L. Hughes was watching a bunch of American engineers doing lots of heavy work, including fighting in France—all in the pictures—and suddenly the audience was startled by the cry "There's Shelley!"

On the screen was Lieut. Shelley O. Hughes, her son, now serving with the American force overseas.

Dallas Hippodrome Taken Over by Hulsey

Owner of Ten Theatres in Various Texas Towns Now Has a Third Dallas House—Will Be Devoted to Big Films.

By Philip Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, Tex.—E. H. Hulsey, who owns a number of the most successful Texas cities, has added another to his string. In addition to the Old Mill and the Queen theatre in Dallas he has taken over the Hippodrome.

The Hippodrome closed down during the big push but the building has been sold and a big petition was started by Dallas merchants and business men asking Mr. Hulsey not to allow this magnificent old theatre to fall into the hands of closed-eyed promoters. They promised him every support possible.

It was immediately announced the opening of the Hippodrome under his management for August 10. The theatre will be devoted to big feature films, and in the winter season they may play on some high-class road shows. The opening attraction will be D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love." Admission prices for such features are 50 cents and 25 cents. There is a special feature showing "Italy's Flaming Front" which will follow as a second film feature. The theatre will have no definite schedule as to the length of showing films, they may be run a week, two weeks, or even longer.

Three Dallas Theatres Remodelling.

Dallas has three theatres in process of remodelling for opening in August. The Majestic at 703 Main, vaudeville, will be entirely remodelled, with a new foyer and lobby, before the opening. The Jefferson will have a new lobby, and will soon be ready for business.

The做得 by William Neville was slightly damaged by fire during the first week in August, and is being remodelled for immediate opening.

Another moving picture fire took place at Orange, Texas, on the last day of July, when a blaze started in the operator's booth of the Airdrome at that city. The audience stampeded, and two men were slightly burned and three bruised and injured. Damage to the theatre was small. Repairs are being made.

Drought Hurts Theatre Business.

Texas Drought Hurts Texas Theatres.

The past two years have been a very hard blow to many of the small towns in Texas, where there has been only one good rain in the past three years. It is becoming more and more apparent that moving picture business has been hit hard in many small towns. Sweetwater and Midland, Texas, have closed their picture theatres during the drought conditions. Business dwindled to practically nothing.

Hollywood and other border cities moving picture business is bad owing to the fact that the border is closed because of the war.

GEORGE BELL, JR., MARRIED.

George Bell, Jr., of the Strand and Palace theatres, Galveston, visited film row in Dallas early in August on his honeymoon trip. He married Miss J. J. He has had a busy week in the Universal office through the draft of Billy Swain, who held this position for some time. The office has been reorganized and made larger; the territory has been divided into three districts in eastern Iowa in the interests of better productions.

L. A. Sheridan, manager of the Pathé office, is doing road work during the shortage of representatives out of this office, three men having been called to the colors during the past month. His visits have been the first of his kind to this territory for a long time. He was in conference with Sheridan the first of the week.

Theatres in Des Moines have kept running at full speed all summer, the picture houses playing to capacity and the Orpheum receiving good business. The Grand Theatre, one of the few single houses of its kind, has been doing an excellent business at the garden four days recently, being topped on a bill that included several excellent acts.

Disc Michaels Small Items.

G. W. Malone Takes New Job.
George W. "Governor" Malone has some mighty near having "his pitcher in the papers" several times, but with this issue he succeeds. And, there's a reason. "Movie" has left the local Mutual exchange, with which he has been connected for about eight months, to become special representative for S. S. Hutchison's success of his new position, for he has learned a good deal about Fisher-Minter-Russell during his eight months with Mutual.

A display of the flowers was made on the stage for the evening performance, and later they were sent to the hospital.
Savoy Theatre at Hamilton, Ontario. Quits Burlesque Policy for Pictures—Grand at Peterboro Also Turns to Films.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Winerva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, Ont.—There will be no burlesque in Hamilton, Ont., during the month of July. The Savoy, the ‘‘home of burlesque’’ in that city, has decided to continue with moving pictures this month. Manager Strong of the Savoy has been competing with several other large local theatres and with the summer film season. He came to the belief that pictures are the real tonic for his house. He has been changing his policy and his prices have been as follows: Matinees, 10c. and 15c.; evenings, 10c., 15c. and 25c. He has been using a seven-piece orchestra all summer. Two shows are being given daily, one at 2:15 and the other at 7:15 p.m.

A similar situation is found in Peterboro, Ont., with the Grand Opera House. This theatre has made a specialty of playing all the road shows available, but Manager Turner is now having the theatre temporarily operated for presentation of continuous picture shows. His future policy will be to book only an occasional road exhibition. The Grand is being changed under the direction of William Dineen of Toronto.

Theatre Darkens for Six Weeks.

After a run of the Artereat feature, ‘‘The Magic House,’’ the Provinces of Winnipeg’s largest closed on Saturday, August 3, for a period of six weeks during which time the whole house is to be reconstructed and renovated. The Province has been in operation for seven years, and has been doing a steady business. An announcement is made that the Bijou and Gaiety theatres, of Winnipeg, controlled by the same people, are going to make bookings of the Province theatre during the time that improvements are being made in the theatre.

Theatre Tries Special Free Admissions.

The Empire theatre, Saskatoon, Sask., operated by the Groves-Walker Company, Limited, adopted an interesting policy for a time. Starting Monday, July 29, to meet hot weather conditions, programs are being changed three times each day. The house is running continuously each weekday day from 1 p.m. to 11 p.m. Each program consists of a five-reel show in colour, and a one-reel comedy reissue. Admission prices range from 5 cents to 15 cents at all times of the day. The theatre is providing visiting nurses for the free admission of women and children at special shows.

All children under twelve years of age, when accompanied by parents, are admitted free every afternoon, while all lady patrons are admitted without charge between 7 and 7:30 each evening.

Y Shows Kill Camp Theatres.

A very unusual situation prevails at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, where several thousand American soldiers are in training for overseas duty. Three theatres were opened by Toronto producers on the 1st of July and the last camp was closed on the 24th of July. One of the three houses, the Kitchener theatre, is a large old wood frame affair, operated by Mrs. Norris, of Toronto. Another is a large wooden theatre known as the Wildwood, run by John and William Dineen. The third is a large black topped tent, the manager of which is known as the ‘‘Carry On,’’ and Mr. Adams secured permission to erect his stand in the park.

The three theatres were doing good business until criticism was leveled at the Y. M. C. A. by the public in general. It was charged that the Y. M. C. A. had become a profit-grabbing institution. The association thereupon made several changes. The only change of any moment was to start a moving picture tent, the admission to which was free. Business at this tent was steady, but the old theatre naturally fell flat, and they may have to close.

The Strand has turned to stock burlesque in order to provide something different to the Y. M. C. A. show, but the other two civilian theatres are sticking to pictures.

New Allen Theatre in Regina.

The new theatre of Jules and J. J. Allen, the Canadian theatre magnates, in Regina, Sask., will be ready about December 1. The Allens have signed a ten-year lease for the property, which is at Broad street and Eleventh avenue, in that city.

Sam Bloom Adds Another.

Sam Bloom has added a fourth theatre to his string of houses in Toronto. His latest is a small theatre at Bloor and Bloor streets. Mr. Bloom became an exhibitor about five years ago with the Academy, on King street, West, Toronto. Not long ago he secured the Moss Park theatre at 225 Queen street east and Eleventh avenue, and he has now on Saturday, July 27, 1918, the new theatre on Bloor street.

Both the Moss Park and Crescent theatre at Bloor and Bloor streets, which Bloom took hold of them, but now they are blooming with all the signs of prosperity.

Making Patrons Forget Hot Weather.

Manager Crand, of the Oakwood theatre, Toronto’s largest suburban theatre, is mixing things up in a successful effort to make people forget the weather. He has made use of contests, presented various vocal artists, and has made it to secure the very best entertainments on the film market.

Another recent stunt was the taking of moving picture pictures of mothers and children attending a matinee performance and these pictures were shown all during the week of August 5 in addition to the regular program.

Two Big Benefit Performances.

ALTIMORE, Md.—Through the courtesy of George A. McDermott, resident manager of Loew’s Hippodrome theatre, and Charles R. and John T. Ford, co-proprietors of Ford’s opera house, two monster benefit performances were held in these palatial palaces on Sunday and Monday, August 4. Both theatres were packed to the doors and the meetings were conducted by the speakers of the Baltimore Conference for Palestine Restoration. About $175,000 was taken in at the meetings, and it marked the opening of the drive for the sale of $1,000,000 worth of War Savings Stamps, to be bought by Baltimore people. This theatre, well known in film circles of Baltimore, has managed this theatre for the past two years. At a special meeting it was not a good proposition, and by skilful booking and showmanship built up a fine patronage.

Plays to Big Houses.

On the strength of the big run which “To Hell With the Kaiser” had at Ford’s opera house during the week of July 29, Charles E. Ford, manager of that theatre, booked it for a second full week’s run beginning August 5. Arthur B. Price, Baltimore Metro representative, has been handling this feature.

Buffalo Trade News of the Past Week

Older Owners of Buffalo Theatres Ready for Possible Draft Call—Notes from the Exchanges and Theatres.

By J. A. McGuire, 216 Carolina St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Older Film Men Getting Ready.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Several Buffalo and western New York exhibitors who are bachelors as well as true patriots, are already figuring on what they will do with their theatres in case they (the proprietors) are called to the colors by the proposed raising of the draft age to 45 years. The film men are chum that while they have always feared the unerring shafts of the diminutive Cupid they will be willing to face unswervingly the "shots and shells of the Hun." The new draft ruling will take thousands of moving pictures devotes away from points in this territory. "The president of a draft board in Syracuse told me that these 15 year plan will affect $5,000 men in that city," said the manager of a Buffalo film exchange. "Based on the same ratio the number of men to be taken out of Buffalo will probably be upward of 100,000."

H. E. Lotz Now with Fox.

H. E. Lotz, former manager of the Triangle, Buffalo, was a caller. Mr. Lotz recently resigned as special representative of that company to accept a similar position with the Fox Film.

Five-Cents Houses Getting Scarce.

It looks as if five-cent moving picture shows will be scarce as admirers of the Kaiser in the Buffalo territories. The Government's proposal to double the seat and admission taxes at the theatres indicates that the public will soon have to pay more money to patronize the picture houses. Even now such signs in front of theatres, "The Greatest Show on Earth at Five Cents," exist only in memory. Gradually the "blood and thunder, something for nothing" tactics used to be a thorn in the side of legitimate showmanship seem to have been pushed into the background. As the old-time flattering signs that formerly ensnared the crowds of film lovers seem to have lost their charm, so far as the trouble is concerned. In fact the public is pretty well aware of the upward prices of everything, pictures included, and what is called philanthropy in the form of "giving something for almost nothing" in the film business seems to have lost its appreciaion.

W. F. Fee! at Camp Dix.

William B. Freer, former shipper for the Triangle, Buffalo, was a recent visitor. He is a member of the 153d Depot Brigade, Co. 7, 2d battaillion, Camp Dix.

Buffalo Film Briefs.

T. C. Montgomery, manager of the Triangle, Buffalo, has returned from a trip through the central New York territory. He has just received a welcome letter from his brother, William Montgomery, who is a member of the Motorized Machine Gun Corps in France. The letter also contained a copy of a charmingly-expressed greeting which King George of England, extended to the soldiers of the United States on their arrival overseas.

Charles Sanwald, auditor of the Modern, New York, is a Buffalo visitor. Charles Streimer, manager of the New York office of the Modern, has returned to that city.

The Acme theatre, Syracuse, formerly owned by G. Pelletier, has been taken over by Metzger Bros., who also own the Lincoln theatre, that city.

Emmett Cornell, of the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, is spending his vacation at Saratoga.

"The bookings of 'To Hell with the Kaiser' are coming in so fast," said E. J. Hayes, manager of the Metro, Buffalo, "that we have found it necessary to get three prints of this production."

Middle New York Theatre Notes

Park Theatre Changes Hands.

UTICA, N. Y.—The Park theatre, formerly the Bender, Utica, N. Y., has been leased, according to report, to Goldstein Bros., of Springfield, Mass., owners of a chain of theatres throughout New England. The Park theatre was opened Oct. 8, 1917, by P. A. and J. B. Breglio, of Springfield, Mass., as a high-class picture theatre with a 10-piece orchestra, and concert singers, after a large sum of money had been expended to make it the most beautiful theatre in central New York. After two months, as a result of patronage falling off, the theatre was forced to close, leaving a number of big bills unpaid in this city. Since it closed the house has remained dark, but now that it has been leased it is expected that it will soon be opened.

Up-State Film Jottings.

Utica now has a Rialto theatre. The Colonia, a popular neighborhood house, and the Kress theatre, and with the name and is being entirely redecorated for the fall season. Service flags are now found in the lobbies of the Alhambra and Avon theatres. Utica. Cincinnati Fire Code Inspector Watchful Operator Found Neglecting His Machine Gets a Fourteen Day Suspension—Code Regulations Must Be Observed.

By Kenneth C. Canin, 365 First

CINCINNATI, O.—The increasing stringency of the inspection by city authorities of the operation of photoplays—house, theatre, one of the two boys that a short time ago a night inspector reported facts which resulted in the suspension of an operator—has been met with an example by Mr. Charles Murphy, who, by neglecting his machine, had previously been warned against the practice.

"This is the first suspension of an operator," said the building commissioner, "but it will not be the last, unless practices are stopped. It is the beginning of a campaign to see that operators stay with their machines and comply with all safety regulations. We have had a number of fires in operating booths recently, and can no longer tolerate them. The thousands of patrons of moving picture houses is in the hands of operators, and I promise that these boys who tend to their work properly and intelligently are licensed to operate."

Park Theatre Closes.

Considering the interest, which had been recorded in Cincinnati moving picture circles to the recent announcement of the closing of the Park Theatre, one of the two boys that a business in the center of Hyde Park, leaving the field clear for the exclusive operation of the Erie, both houses have been successful during the several years they have been in operation in the same block. The general public has been well pleased and will be remodeled for his use. The deal includes the space adjoining the theatre, which is leased for an airshome during the summer months.

Cincinnati Brief Notes.

Manager Charles Weigel, of the Alhambra, Cincinnati, had a most successful week's run of "Ruggles of Red Gap," featuring Taylor Holmes. The popularity of the novel from which the play was made was reflected in the attendance at the West Fifth street house, and accounted for the success of the run, which is longer than manager Weigel usually cares to handle.

The ever-new feature comedy in which Charles Chaplin and Marie Dressler convinced the world, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," is now being reprised recently in Cincinnati, booked by Manager Tom Corby, of the Star, for two days.

Charles Murphy Opens Theatre.

The house is as up to date in every respect as any that can be found in the larger cities, and is equipped in a manner which gives promise of enduring success for Mr. Murphy in his new capacity.

Jacobs, while he enters the naval branch of the U. S. Navy, and will not be seen on a

"To Hell With the Kaiser" played a week's engagement at the Bank Theatre, Akron, and set a new standard for the house, both in attendance and receipts. The house was sold out for every performance.

Jim Dunley, manager of the bank, not away, was engaging in advertising on the picture when he won a "What to Do With the Kaiser" contest that the Akron Press ran and advertised largely, "To Hell With the Kaiser." This bit of knowledge of the fitness of things netted Dunley a nice new liver spot.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" also succeeded in breaking the hoody that has surrounded all the other features, being in Toledo, Manager H. C. Horater of the Alham bra, opened with the Metro picture last Sunday and has done splendidly within a few dollars of reaching his highest establishment, which is the history of the house.

Fifty members of the Famous Players closed up shop a Saturday and transferred all their energies to pleasuring. The Cleveland Yacht Club was the scene of the outing, although most of the action took place in the water and on board the yacht Lachry, which Commodore Kirby kindly turned over to the film folks. The evening was devoted to dancing.

"WILD PRIMROSE"
Vitagraph Presents Gladys Leslie in a Really Delightful Screen Offering.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE MOVIES would jump into unhindered and ever-increasing popularity if they were always as wholesome and entertaining as "Wild Primrose," in which Gladys Leslie is featured as a screen star of youthfulness, talent and inherent qualifications. The rare delight attending all who are fortunate enough to see her is enhanced by the agreeable and unassuming personality in which the plot is advanced by players who act utterly human and do not overact. Mrs. Leslie is hardly average circumstance. Little matter that the plot is brushed by the far-outstretched hand of circumstance, for impossible things happen in real life that pictures, to a reasonable extent, may be expected to find a safe haven for plot advancement in strange happenings.

Primrose, as interpreted by Miss Leslie, is a charming and innocent maiden, who is returned to her native home during a vacation from the seminary. Her guardian-uncle tells her, for the first time, how her father, a rich Easterner, married and then neglected her mother for the reason that his bride was not agreeable. Primrose was left deserted and, from a broken heart, the mother died. The father is now married again—to a woman who has provided him with a grown-up son. The young man has nothing to do but dissipate, and does that well, winding up with a bride who has induced him to marry her while wine was Boving Knee-deep in the valley of their earth-toned home.

The father sends for Primrose, and she decides to masquerade as a wild mountain girl in fulfillment of her father's wish that she should return to New York. Miss Leslie neither imitates intelligence in the father's surroundings, she sees his mother, and seizes her chances to throw off her shell of deceit she blossoms forth as a delight to the eyes and a credit to her entourage.

The plot thickens in due course. The father speculates in stocks, gets into the clutches of a convicting broker, who demands the hand of Primrose as his recompense. This is not all to the ideas Primrose has been formed on the marriage question. She likes her father's step-child and worries not about the money end of affairs—for oil has been found on the Tennessee farm her mother owned and Primrose is worth more than the United States loaned to a Russian Government.

Step-son's wife proves to be the regal-garde spouse of the secretary who has served Primrose's father for years. The broker demands his ransom or threatens ruin to his victim—and then Primrose pours oil on troubled waters. It is regrettable that so many threads of the plot must be drawn together hastily in the concluding scenes, but the result is attained without too much shock to the sensibilities, in a total of entertaining photoplaying.

Carrying so much of the story upon her slender and perfectly "beautiful" shoulders, Miss Leslie contrives to be on view most of the time without once becoming an intrusion. Her manner is so natural, her artistry so deft and her presence so entirely agreeable that one is glad to have

"THE FORBIDDEN BOX"
Jewel Production Featuring Mildred Harris Points to Moral of Contentment.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A STORY by E. V. Durling has been used as a basis for the six-part Jewel production, "The Forbidden Box," in which Mildred Harris is featured with Henry Woodward playing opposite to her. The picture was made by Lois Weber and Phillip Smalley. Up to a certain point it is satisfactory, and one is impressed with the manner in which the lesson of the production is set forth, but toward the close the action becomes somewhat far-fetched and fails to be convincing. Unusually fine sets have been employed in the picture and the spectator cannot fail to be impressed with the artistic richness of the interiors.

The illusion of the unattainable is the idea worked upon in the story in which a young girl is represented as being discontented with her simple country home; and after his flight, the production of money and luxury is still discontented because she has not been allowed to drift off to the little abode under the high lights of the city. Her husband, once a leader of a fast set in New York, refuses to open to her a window of the "forbidden box," the opening of which is bound sooner or later to destroy her illusions. Finally when she has become obsessed with the idea of going to the city to live he yields, but in yielding immediately forms plans to drive her back to the country. The unconvincing part of the story occurs in the carrying out of these plans, which strike one as being inconsist-

"HIS BIRTHRIGHT"
First Haworth Production to Be Released Through Mutual, Lacking in Constructive Merits.

BASED on a story in which the plot doesn't seem to get anywhere the story which seems to have nothing new in it for the spectator in which Sessue Hayakawa is starring is somewhat at a loss to convince the spectator of the high qualifications from which the "forbidden box," which is being released through the Mutual Film Corporation, had better opportunities and more ingenious direction been afforded him.

As it is there is a tendency toward posting rather than natural action on the part of the star, while the director strives to extract comedy from situations where it does not naturally exist, depending largely on the sub-titles to get it over, and worries with the more tragic incidents in a way which causes the action to drag.

A Japanese atmosphere has been cleverly contrived as a background for the opening of the story, and much credit is due the art director for the exquisite beauty of some of the scenes.

Briefly speaking, the story concerns a young Japanese lad born of a Japanese mother and an American father. The boy, reared in a Japanese fishing village by a servant of his mother's house, learns at the attainment of manhood that his mother, brokenhearted at the desertion of her husband, stabbed herself to death at the feet of the gods while he was still a baby. In vengeful mood he goes to America to seek out the man who killed him if the opportunity presents itself. Before this tragedy has a chance to happen the father explains matters.

"THE HOUSE OF MIRTH"

Metro Makes Pleading Adaptation of Edith Wharton's Novel.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

The story, as adapted by the Edith Wharton novel, "The House of Mirth," makes an attractive basis for a screen production. It has been skillfully handled in a five-act Metro feature directed by Albert Capellani, with Katherine Harris Barrymore as the star. Many familiar names appear in the cast, including Henry Kolker, Christine Mayo, Joseph Kilgour, Lottie Briscoe, Edward A. Heffes, Pauline Weich, Maggie Western, Nellie Parker-Spaulding, W. D. Fichter, Sidney Bracy, Kempton Greene, and Morgan Jones. Without unduly accentuating unpleasant situations the director has succeeded well in turning the finer points of the story to account, and Katherine Harris Barrymore has given a splendid portrayal of a character which, regardless of the handicap of her birth, uplifts the dignity of moral womanhood.

The story in brief tells the tale of an orphan who lives with an aunt who constantly reminds her of the necessity of making a wealthy marriage. Her extravagance and carelessness regarding her matrimonial future causes her aunt at her death to leave her penniless. Her love of luxury together with her aunt's admonitions causes her to discourage the attentions of a lawyer of moderate circumstances who has always professed love for her. In the course of events she is placed in a compromising position by the behalf of a friend who, knowing that her wife is to be absent, invites her to dine at his home. At this point of the story the departure of the man who has compromised her becomes an outcast, and at the point of chloroforming herself she is rescued and becomes betrothed to her lawyer lover.

"IN JUDGMENT OF"

Story and Scenario by George D. Baker. Given Screen Presentation in Metro Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

Of the most absorbing of present day productions is "In Judgment Of," based on the story and scenario of George D. Baker and directed by Wil S. Davis. It is a production that is good because it is good. One is impressed with a sensation of all round excellence. When you have finished looking at "In Judgment Of" you have lost any special interest which you may have entertained at the beginning of the picture and you are connected with the picture and you settle back in your chair with a sigh of relief at having viewed a production of a story of life as it really can happen—a story with a big situation presented consistently and artistically.

In the adaptation of the story the featured players are Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklin Furnham and Herbert Stannard, the latter exhibiting remarkable finesse in the interpretation of the role of Judge Brainard. The supporting cast consisted of Edward Alexander, Lydia Knott, Harry Northrup, Spottiswoode Atkin and Katherine Griffith.

The story is a tremendously human one in which a young woman of wealthy parentage and possessed of second sight accidentally meets and invites to her home a young doctor who has never known either parent, and has been educated by means of funds supplied from a mysterious source. At the young woman's home he meets Judge Brainard, an elderly man who is notably disturbed at sound of the doctor's name. The audience at this point is led into the secret that the old man is the father of the young man, forming the mysterious source from which his college funds have come. A peculiar circumstance now enters the story in which a college pal of the doctor's uses illegal means to get his friend's signature on a cheque. The wholly uncanny and cavedropping learned the Judge's secret and also the fact that he has deposited figures in the bank for so he fears to own for political reasons and because his mother was the daughter of a murderer. The scene of the production occurs when the father, having unreasoningly caused the death of the forger, sits in judgment on his son, who has been accused of the murder of the man on circumstantial evidence. Not until the jury has brought in a verdict of "Guilty" does the old man find the courage to confess. A pretty love story adds a romantic touch to the production.

Marcus, the chief character, displayed with real feeling and much personalization of the story of the psalmist that even the songs of the sea beget by no end of misfortunes; but the situation of the spectator is never held firmly nor does he understand the action that makes even a middle-class melodrama entertaining. For the most part built of familiar scenes and settings, the author has not prevented "Chasing Sands" from becoming a fairly pleasing picture. Little skilful comic relief is added to the story a dramatic handling. A capable cast has been reasonably well directed by Albert Parker, and the camera work, by Pliny Horne, is up to the same standard.

At the beginning of the story, Marcia Grey is trying to support herself and an invalid sister by her paintings. Possessing but little talent for the work, she is reduced to any means of raising funds to provide for the care of her sister. In the attempt to recapture her means, she has fallen into debt. However, a new stroke of fortune for her sister occurs when she is sent to the Salvation Army.

She joins the ranks, meets a wealthy young social reformer, is married to him and once more comes face to face with Von Holtz, who is disguised as an English nobleman. Marcia's husband has government secrets, and Von Holtz is after them. Marcia recognizes the German spy, but he threatens to reveal his wife's secrets if she does not help him. THE GREAT LOVE

Griffith's First Artcraft Production Is Worth by His Past Reputation.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

One of the unique qualities of a Griffith picture is the way the shadow of greatness is cast across every scene. In "The Great Love," the story is told in the most simple terms, yet it is so well told that the audience is carried along with it. The acting is excellent, with the leading roles played by accomplished actors. The photography is outstanding, and the entire production is a credit to the studio involved.

Certain features of its construction show an advance in technique that is to be commended. The story is developed in a way that makes the emphasis that marks so many screen stories. A tale of the great war, its director has wisely chosen not to go with it down with an atmosphere of gloomy hysteria and exaggerated apprehension. The men and women engaged in war are the heroes of the picture, and the fine art expression that is always associated with a Griffith photo-play is present in this one as well.
way to the screen. Portions of it are melodrama, but there is no doubt that the treatment is episodic, not epictical, and in the telling Director Griffith has adopted the quick, nervous excitement of the French novelist. This method is very effective and marks a decided advance in screen procedure.

Another notable innovation is the tableau effect of a portion of the German War scenes. As one looks at the register but one thought, sometimes with the immovable concentration of a picture painted on a wall. The man who popularized the cut-back on the screen makes such slight use of it in his latest picture it is practically unused at all.

The acting of Henry Wallis comes in the WILD MAN, and his method is similar to Griffith's. His method is often that of the pantomimist, his emotion being expressed by swift, strong gestures, rather than by the face or the glance of his eye. The result of all this departure from familiar rules of screen procedure is excellent, and lends a touch of novelty and fresh interest to the picture that vastly enhances its value.

D. W. Griffith is still the master mind of the screen.

Jim Young, of Youngstown, Pa., is the hero of "The Great Love." Early in the war he enlists in a Canadian regiment and reaches the front one way of the world. While he is in London he meets the little Australian girl, most entertainingly played by Lilian Gish, who promises to be his wife in the closing scene of the story. Before this happens, however, she is married to Sir Roger Brighton, a nobleman, by whom she has been entangled with a band of German spies and is almost tricked into betraying his confidences. Young's part is a good one and is extremely well managed. The brooding mystery and dread of the ever-present Zepplins is impressed on the spectator with almost perfect realism.

Mention of the sub-titles should not be omitted. They are as direct and free from any attempt at fine phrasing as is the speech of Jim Young, a part that Robert Harron makes so likable and thoroughly American that everyone is bound to feel he represents the best type of soldier we have sent to fight our battles in France.

Grade A performances are given by Gloria Hope as Jessie Hallowell, George Fawcett as Jack Bayne, who is sentenced to die, and Rosemary Theby as Madame Correntee, Maxfield Stanley as John Broadway, and Edward Seward. Henry B. Walthall is particularly well suited to the character of Sir Roger Brighton.

Among the English titled folk that appear briefly in "The Great Love" are Queen Mary, who is seen in a heart-rending manner, the Countess of Duchess, Lady Diana Manners, Miss Elizabeth Asquith and Miss Violet Koppel.

THE SUMMER GIRL (Paramount-Mack Sennett), Aug. 26—The new Mack Sennett comedy, "The Summer Girls," is well described by its title. There is an abundance of pretty summer girls and lively chasing around a big summer hotel; the story is of the stereotyped kind, and is of no special merit. Some of the best scenes in it are in and about the swimming pool of the hotel which shows some exceedingly graceful diving. A curious pelican furnishes some amusing scenes. Much of the comedy is reminiscent of other film farces.

WHITE A.C. SPECIAL

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT PROJECTION

The exacting demands of modern motion picture projection require extreme care in the selection of the light source. The light must be such that the finest variations of high lights and shadows shall be perfectly recorded on the screen and every object depicted perfect in every detail. The flexibility must be great enough to compensate for the varying densities of films made under different light conditions.

The White A.C. Special Carbons fulfill these requirements in every particular. They give a strong, pure white light of high intensity, noiseless operation and absolutely flickerless illumination that eliminates eye fatigue.

COLUMBIA-SILVETIP COMBINATION

The standard direct current trim gives perfect projection.

Satisfactory Service Is Worth Many Dollars Difference in First Cost

WHEN we looked around for Motor Generators and electrical accessories for moving picture theatre installation, it did not take us long to discover the wonderful success and service obtained with "HALLBERG" motor generators, transformers and other specialties.

While we had practically all other make competing apparatus under consideration, it was the consensus of opinion of our branch managers and engineers, who had sold and installed all other make motor generators and electrical apparatus in the past, that the "HALLBERG" apparatus was most favorably known and accepted as the STANDARD by which others are judged and compared among operators and exhibitors.

In consequence of this opinion, we secured the exclusive distribution of the "HALLBERG" motor generators and other apparatus for moving picture theatres in the United States and Canada, in preference to all other makes.

The wisdom of our selection has been proven by the enormous sales during the past year and the SATISFACTION expressed by all users of the HALLBERG MOTOR GENERATOR—The demand for this machine is constantly increasing, and the up-to-date exhibitor is replacing other less efficient and satisfactory motor generators with our "HALLBERG."

Remember, the HALLBERG MOTOR GENERATOR is the "DOUBLE ARC MOTOR GENERATOR WHICH GIVES DOUBLE THE AMPERES FOR SINGLE ARC." This means that, with the "HALLBERG" Double Arc Motor Generators, the arc lamps are NOT CONNECTED IN SERIES, as this limits the ampere output when one arc is burning to one-half of what it is with the "HALLBERG."

We consider this a most important feature because it permits the operator to DOUBLE THE AMPERES IF NECESSARY at the arc for a dark film.

Our HALLBERG TWIN UNIT Motor Generator system is UNSURPASSED; it is the last word from the viewpoint of EFFICIENCY and SERVICE, and we will be glad to explain it to you.

This Letter Is to the Point

ALLEN THEATRE
"Saskatchewan's Finest"
Moose Jaw, Sask., July 11, 1918.

Dear Sirs:
Would you kindly send book on Hallberg motor generator set?
Have used this set for the last two years and find it satisfactory in every way.
Hoping for an early reply, I am

Respectfully yours,
(Signed) H. WARDROP.

Provisionist Ray says

"It's Power's Cameragraph for mine every time.

"The success of your projection depends more on the Intermittent Movement than on any other thing; and the Power's movement is the best on earth. It's like this:

"In the projection of a film subject each individual picture must remain stationary upon the screen for a period of time. The longer this period, the better the eye can get the details.

"The Power's movement holds each picture on the screen nearly 7% longer than any other movement; and, believe me, I've used 'em all.

"That's why you get better definition with a Power's; that's why, as I say of the Cameragraph,

"It Puts the Picture on the Screen"

"This is a Goldwyn Year!"

That is why the nation's greatest exhibitors are now booked solid for Goldwyn Pictures for the next twelve months.
—its repeat will get you more money than an imitation's first showing!

The day on which the best imitation of "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," was released the value of this Original and Only Artistic Triumph as a repeat was advanced tremendously. Because every Exhibitor who saw the imitation knew instantly that his one best bet was to play the Original not only as a First Showing but also as a Repeat on every open date in his calendar.

Ponder this for a moment! The best advertised play on the best advertised subject in the whole wide world—and this free publicity growing, growing, growing—why, Man! its repeat will get you more money than an imitation's first showing! Take your two eyes and your checkbook to your nearest JEWEL Exchange today. Settle that "repeat business" now.

—The Beast of Berlin
Thanks for the Trouble on "Triple Trouble"

To Whom It May Concern:

Essanay feels that it owes a debt of gratitude to its competitors for spreading broadcast statements in regard to our NEW Charlie Chaplin picture, "TRIPLE TROUBLE."

Knowing the motive for these statements, the interest of exhibitors all over the country has been aroused.

They have looked for, and found, our irrefutable arguments.

But what is more vital, they have learned what other exhibitors, who have run "TRIPLE TROUBLE," have done in the way of box office returns.

Particularly, they have learned what M. J. Weil, manager of the Castle Theatre, a first run Chicago house, did.

Mr. Weil said: "TRIPLE TROUBLE' played to the biggest business ever done at the Castle Theatre, and I broke a rule of the house and ran the picture a second week, because my patrons demanded it."

The exhibitor knows that what one theatre has done, his can do; what one audience likes, another will.

He knows the opinion of another exhibitor is unbiased, because he has nothing to gain by making it.

Interest has been aroused to such a pitch, exhibitors have thronged the George Kleine exchanges, at our invitation, to see the picture for themselves. You can count on the exhibitor knowing what he wants when he sees it. The result is, bookings have been coming in faster than we dreamed of.

We knew the picture would go big, because we had a GOOD Chaplin comedy and a NEW one. But we could not have advertised it so extensively and done so much in so short a time had it not been for this unintentional cooperation. We thank you.

Focusing America's Attention on the "Better Motion Pictures"

In thousands of theatres in the week of September 1st, nothing but Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures will be shown. It will be a week of showing America just what the motion picture is today—the national amusement, a vital part of America's seething life.

It will be a week of building of good will, a week in which the theatres will show the whole country just what better motion pictures are.

Such a week would be worthless unless the theatres of America show, first, pictures bearing trade marks so well known that the crowds will come to see them; second, pictures so good that they can stand the test of this concentrated demonstration.

The only company in the industry that has the producing and distributing organization to furnish the quality of motion picture necessary for such an important test of the worthwhileness of the industry is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The only pictures that the exhibitor implicitly can trust always to make good to the public are Paramount and Arctcraft Pictures.

And so if you are not already booked solid, get in on it quick!

You, at your theatre, for your profit, for the National Week, for the industry of which you are a part—now and for the years to come.

It is just as important to project the right sort of pictures "over here" as to fire the right sort of cartridges "over there."

More than a year after the United States entered the War, America's motion picture industry finds itself stronger, more favored, more necessary than ever before.

The motion picture's mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home—it is the national amusement, filling an urgent human need.

The organization behind Paramount and Artcraft pictures is dedicated to two purposes—to help keep up the spirit of America and to perpetuate and refine the art of the motion picture.

Twenty million photo-play lovers and many thousands of theatres demand Paramount and Artcraft pictures every week because they are better pictures.

This coming week, you can go to any of the better theatres, anywhere, any day, or every day, and be sure of a good, clean, wholesome, heartening show all through, every minute. Drama, adventure, comedy, travel—the program will be made up of Paramount and Artcraft features, and a very little else besides. In many cases nothing else. Such programs as that right here in front of your eyes— that one is typical.

We named that theatre Alhambra merely as an example. It might just as well be Strand, Rialto, Palace, Rivoli, Empire, Crescent, Globe, Cascade, Court, or the name of the theatre nearest you.

After this coming week is over you will know it is Paramount and Artcraft that have made "better motion pictures" familiar to you. — "Foremost stars, superbly directed, in clean motion pictures."

On the evening of Thursday, August 29th, in the best homes in your town, the folks are going to be reading, in the Saturday Evening Post, the double page advertisement, a small reproduction of which is shown above.

The banker, the station agent, the druggist, the grocer, the mayor and their wives and children will be reading it.
Everybody who is anybody in your town reads the Saturday Evening Post. You know that.

And after they've read it they'll have new respect for the industry of which you are a part, and they'll say, each of them: "Isn't that a fine idea! Wonder where we'll find these Paramount and Artcraft Pictures this week?"

Is the answer going to be the name of your theatre—or the other fellow's?
Why Quality
Producers release thru Hodkinson Service

SOME confusion formerly existed in the mind of the trade in reference to the W W. Hodkinson Corporation

By confusing the distributing organization of W W. Hodkinson with the product it sells, many have entirely lost sight of the fact that this corporation is the only independent distributing channel in the industry absolutely unhampered by those entangling producer or exhibitor ties which by strangling independence forbid the impartial fair and equitable business dealings with both sides that characterize the Hodkinson method of doing business.

This fact, coupled with a knowledge of Mr. Hodkinson's principles and record of achievements, has made the high-minded producers now releasing through Hodkinson realize that his present organization spells big success for them, because it is honestly and entirely right in every way.

More than that, the comprehensive consolidation of the exhibitors' buying power throughout the country by means of the Hodkinson Co. Partnership Plan offers them a safe assured and continuous market for quality product.

Hodkinson Service is being moulded to fit the needs of exhibitors and is being sold to them on a basis of profit to the exhibitor and producer.

My dear Mr. Hodkinson:

I feel it would be a serious personal favor to let you know that I have been interested in recent reports of your activities in regard to the independent distributing organization of the film industry, as well as your new plan for the relief of exhibition and production. As you are well aware, I have had the opportunity to observe the work of your organization and the results which have been obtained by you and your associates. I am convinced that your organization is the only one that is able to meet the demands of the exhibitors and producers alike.

Dressing Your House Program

"CLOTHES make the man" it is said. Opinion may differ as to the exact truth of this quotation but it is true that a program, just like a man may be greatly improved by judicious "dressing."

The cut below is a most attractive design for the first Kathleen Clifford Plaza Picture "Angel Child." It will add to the selling value of your program a good deal.

We are ready to supply it in various sizes to meet the requirements of the average program. This cover design may also by careful mortising of type matter, be used as a stock cover for all Plaza Pictures.

Intensive selling is the order of the day. Don't neglect any item—they all count in the final analysis at the box office.

You can truthfully advertise official films that really show real fighting—

The New York American says:
For exciting action and cumulative dramatic interest "Italy's Flaming Front" is unquestionably the most remarkable ever filmed; its authenticity is self-evident.

6 reels full of variety, full of thrills, full of fight.

"Italy's Flaming Front"
The First Films of a Whole Battle

The New York Journal of Commerce says:
The Official Italian War Pictures at the Rivoli are creating an extraordinary amount of enthusiasm.

The New York World says:

Purchased from the American representatives of the Italian Government by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Another Big "First National" Money Maker

Dozens of different types of big guns are shown in action—the shells are shown breaking in the Austrian trenches across the valley.
"Italy's Flaming Front"

Actually shows in clear photography, the following—

Mountain fighting: Bombarding enemy’s trenches with big guns in preparation for infantry charge. Italian “75” hit by Austrian shell—smithereens! Italian artillery’s hot reply—you never saw prettier work. Close ups of dozens of different types of big guns, from 40 centimeters to trench “bombards” in action.

Men crouching low in trenches, bullets spattering on sand-hags overhead. They go over the top, advancing in short sprints, taking advantage of every bit of cover. The final rush, hand-to-hand bayonet fighting, victory! bringing back hordes of prisoners.

Italian grand battle fleet in bombardment of Austrian stronghold near Trieste. From Dreadnoughts to submarine chasers hurling tons of shell at enemy. Close-ups and panoramic views of entire action.

First complete air fight ever photographed. Austrian bombing plane attacks fleet. Six Italian sea planes give chase (two carrying enlisted cameramen). Shrapnel from Italian batteries bursting around Italian planes (caught by Italian cameramen in planes). One Italian plane’s engine disabled by shrapnel and plane is forced to descend to sea under fire of Austrian batteries. Italian plane rescues aviators and destroys the plane to prevent its capture by Austrians. Austrian drops bombs at fleet, their explosions hurl huge pillars of water and spray skyward; a submarine chaser hit, you see the explosion and the craft capsizes from quarter mile distance—Italian planes close in, Austrian, in desperation, does dare-devil tail dive to sea and saves his life but is captured by Italian torpedo boat.

Italian monitors and floating gun carriages each mounting one great gun, in action.

In General:—

Fighting above the clouds, Italy’s spider men on skis, the wonderful aerial cable communications, unbelievable feats of patience and hardihood bridging mountain torrents and dragging great guns by hand to lofty positions where tractors, even mules are unable to go.

The eyes of the night. A night bombardment of Austrian positions showing effect of shrapnel fire on barb-wire entanglements. Giant search lights in operation, one of war’s marvels.

Many other thrilling and interesting scenes not described here because of lack of space.

I have seen these films and can personally vouch for the truth of the above statements.

The editors of the leading newspapers everywhere will endorse these films as being the real thing—because they are!

New York Daily Newspapers:

N. Y. Sun, March 18, 1918
"Italians storming an Austrian trench in a hail of shrapnel are shown as one of the incidents in the official Italian War Pictures at the Rivoli this week. They are also shown building bridges and carrying on the great mechanical work necessary to fight the Austrians over the mountains. They are the most vivid battle pictures that have been shown here in many months."

N. Y. World, March 25, 1918
"Official Italian War Pictures at the Rivoli attracted crowded audiences last week. The victory of an Italian aviator over an Austrian flyer, with the fall of the latter, and other graphic scenes of real fighting were shown."

N. Y. Globe, April 22, 1918
"There are most thrilling incidents in the Italian War Pictures and they are the sort to keep the people in the audience on the edge of their seats until the final storming of the Austrian trench is over."

Brooklyn Times, March 18, 1918
"At the Rivoli the representative of the Italian Ministry Mission to the United States, the Consular staff, and the commercial representative of Italy gave Sunday night's performance the air of a diplomatic function and there were so many Italians in the audience that these war pictures called forth incessant applause culminating in the wildest enthusiasm when their countrymen went 'over the top'.

Motion Picture Trade Papers:

Moving Picture World, April 13, 1918
"An Austrian battleplane pursued by Italian fliers and forced to capitulate. The bombardment of Hermang, overlooking the Adriatic. The hurling of smoke bombs and the infantry going into action under shrapnel fire protected by smoke clouds. The thrilling capture of hundreds of Austrian prisoners."

Exhibitors' Trade Review, April 6, 1918
"They are quite the best stuff of its kind that has been shown here. This week's films present in all their exciting detail an aerial and naval attack on an Austrian stronghold. One of the big features is a flight between Italian hydroplanes and an Austrian airship. This is a truly wonderful bit of motion picture photography taken by a cameraman in one of the battleplanes."

Motion Picture News, Page 2216
"ITALY'S FLAMING FRONT" shows the most remarkable fighting pictures that have ever been shown, beginning with flocks of Italian aeroplanes taking the observations, the preparations in the trenches, going 'over the top' and finally the capture of droves of Austrians. . . . Time after time the audiences broke into applause, loud cries came from the galleries again and again, and then at the end, when the torn Italian flag is shown waving over the battlefield where shells are still bursting—well, the scene at the Rivoli is one you will never forget.

Pershing’s Crusaders

The first U.S. official war feature

Will be published in this Roll and the United States Government Division of Films will present a handsome "Victory Screen Pledge" to its proprietors to be used for lobby display and as a memento of their patriotic action.

This issue marks the final appearance of the entire Honor Roll, but as the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is dated practically two weeks ahead, all additional theatres eligible to this Roll of Honor by booking "Pershing’s Crusaders" with contracts made and dated previous to September 1st, 1918 (although the picture may be run later), will be published in the two following issues and then the winner of the handsome trophy will be announced.

Names preceded by an asterisk (*) are the week's supply of newcomers on the Honor Roll.

If you have contracted for "Pershing’s Crusaders," the name of your theatre positively will appear in this roll. It will be two, or even three weeks afterward, as it takes time to pass the contracts through various departments.

ANNOUNCES

"The Common Cause"

A Special Super-Feature in Eight Reels. Produced Under the Auspices of and by Collaboration With the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

Its Aim: To aid recruiting in all branches of the service—to further stimulate the wave of patriotism that is now sweeping the country.

Its Theme: The bringing together of all the allied nations, now fighting for humanity—the cementing of that “Brotherhood in Arms.”

IT IS AN ENTIRELY DIFFERENT WAR STORY WITH "A LAUGH, A THRILL AND A THROB"

Its authors are: J. Hartley Manners, Ian Hay Beith and Percival Knight.

The Scenario by Anthony P. Kelly

The All-Star Cast
Herbert Rawlinson as "Captain Palmer"
Mr. Rawlinson enjoys world-wide popularity as one of the most intelligent and forceful stars of the screen. In "Smashing Through," he scored a Broadway success, and will appear shortly as a leading man with Geraldine Farrar.

Lawrence Grossmith as "Private Tommy Atkins"
Lieutenant Grossmith, the famous comedian of the English and American stage, makes his screen debut in "The Common Cause," having been detailed to play the role by the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

Philip Van Lorn
As a Polu, French actor who has achieved success on stage and screen

Louis Dean as "Captain Beck"
Clever character actor who portrayed the Kaiser in Vitagraph's "Over the Top" and "My Four Years in Germany."

NOTICE OF DISTRIBUTION

I HAVE looked over the entire field of motion picture distribution for the company best equipped to give "The Common Cause" the distribution its aim and theme deserve.

Measured by actual accomplishment, I have selected Vitagraph and its Distributing Organization as the most thoroughly equipped company in the picture field to present "The Common Cause" to the exhibitors, and through them to the people of America.

I know what Vitagraph has accomplished with "The Battle Cry of Peace," with "Over the Top," with "Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation," "Within the Law," "The Girl Philippa," "The Fall of a Nation" and other special productions. I know how thoroughly Vitagraph has covered the field and how splendidly it has served the exhibitors of the country with these productions.

With this first-hand information, I have arranged with Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, for the marketing through that organization of "The Common Cause."

Assured therefore of the highest efficiency in the matter of distribution, all that I am putting into the production of the "The Common Cause" will be well worth while, for I know that its message will reach to the farthest corners of the continent—into the smallest hamlet and cross roads.

J. STUART BLACKTON

The All-Star Cast
Sylvia Breamer as "Mrs. Orrin Palmer"
Miss Breamer is the beautiful and talented young Australian actress whose superlative performance of the heroine in J. Stuart Blackton's "Missing" won exceptional praise, and was one of the triumphs of her phenomenal career on the stage and screen.

Mlle. Marcel as "Celeste"
Well known French actress who made an individual success in "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

Huntley Gordon as "Edward Wadsworth"
One of the best known leading men on the stage or screen. His next appearance will be as Ethel Barrymore's leading man in "Our Mrs. McChesney."

Chas. & Violet Blackton as "Two Little Refugees"

A special musical score is being written for "The Common Cause" by the eminent composer, Manuel Klein, who was for ten years musical director and composer of the New York Hippodrome.

Some Short Subjects

Over at Pathé's projection room this week they showed us the first two episodes of their new serial,
"Hands Up," with Ruth Roland and George Cheesman.
I haven't been in the habit of reviewing serials and short subjects and I don't intend to review this one, but it struck me as being a marked advance over anything we have previously had in the continued photoplay line and I thought, maybe some of you fellows would like to know what I really think of it.

"Wid" things seriously or recommended them for big houses but definitely if this new one of Pathé's doesn't have a Fleet star.

They've made a very conscientious attempt here to make stuff exciting, except that they have put convincing, in a way that really thrilling and far more than any previous stuff along this line that I have seen, than any previous stuff along this line that near the Mexican border and the talky talking on the the story had to do with a tribe of Inca Indians and the story which is run by "Hands Up," played by George Ruth Roland is a reporter who braves the Dangers of the sun, the deserts and the Rifted story she is captived and chained to the wolves.
They have a

when we are very exciting and thrilling scenes, are super. They give us some big fights in this film and we have some weird and effective fighting in the lone side of the story that are plotted in the first episode.

Play it for a winner!

Timely Suggestions
To Producers:

Never, in the history of the industry, has a substantial, efficient organization been so necessary to the successful marketing of productions in foreign territory. War time conditions make exacting service a paramount necessity. Our facilities for the sale, exploitation, routing, shipping, collecting, insuring, etc., of film are the result of years of experience in foreign fields. We would be glad of the opportunity to show you how the house of ROBERTSON-COLE can better serve you.

The scope of our sales organization is broad enough to meet the requirements of the most extensive producers who have to get big round sums for their pictures; and at the same time is so constituted that it can give the same painstaking, result-getting attention to the less pretentious pictures.

WHY are Screen Classics Inc. productions the really big, sure fire money makers of the picture field today?

Why have "Revelation, The Slacker, Toys of Fate, Draft 258, My Own United States, Lest We Forget, Blue Jeans, The Million Dollar Dollies" and the latest and greatest "To Hell with the Kaiser" proved the biggest success of the year?

BECAUSE - after the star, the play and the director were selected, the productions were supervised and personally carried forward in the making by the 2 greatest picture makers in America today - Maxwell Karger and George D. Baker.

When we say greatest we mean the men who could combine art, drama and human appeal in the making of pictures that would attract and hold audiences and make the box office the happiest department of the theatre.
MAXWELL KARGER
supervises Metro and Screen Classics productions. He has been "the man behind the production" with many of our greatest successes and the entire motion picture industry is greatly in his debt for the same upward progress of the screen.

Stars Come Through for Fourth Loan

Chairman Zukor of the National Association's Committee Reports the Work of His Confreres Greatly Simplified by the Alacrity and Enthusiasm Displayed by the Leading Screen Players in Putting Over Thousand-Foot Liberty Specials

The invitation extended by Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity for the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign, to the stars of the motion picture industry to make short Liberty Loan pictures has been accepted with alacrity and enthusiasm by practically all of those whose aid was solicited. As a result, the committee appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which Adolph Zukor is chairman, finds its work simplified to a great extent and is now engaged chiefly on the details of distribution.

It was the original intention of the Zukor committee to write the stories to the various companies and stars, but after due consideration it was decided it would be better to outline the character of the stories desired, leaving the details to the originality of the stars and their scenario writers. This method has been followed and is proving extremely successful.

So enthusiastic is Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathé, that he has issued specific instructions to the various departments of the company as to the methods to be pursued, supplementing them with the following statement:

"We propose to bend every effort in assisting the Government in making the next Liberty Loan Drive the success it deserves to be. All the Pathe stars, including Pearl White, Frank Keenan, Fannie Ward, Ruth Roland, Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, Baby Marie Osborne and other, are going to bend their efforts to the wholehearted work for Uncle Sam. The services of these stars are at the disposal of the Government and the Pathe company is ready and willing to co-operate along any other lines that the Government may suggest."

President Samuel Goldfish, of Goldwyn, has notified the committee that Mabel Normand and Mae Marsh will start work on their pictures as soon as suitable stores are worked out, while Willard Mack, Goldwyn's scenario chief, begged the privilege of making a thousand foot picture starring Pauline Frederick and including a number of other well-known Goldwyn players. This offer was immediately accepted and the picture is now in the making.

Griffith Will Direct a Lillian Gish Picture.

Mr. Zukor has received a telegram from D. W. Griffith, stating he will personally direct the picture in which Lillian Gish is to appear. Among the other stars connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation who were requested to make pictures have responded to the invitation and are either now at work on their productions or are having their stories written for them. Speaking for Jesse L. Lasky, vice president in charge of productions, Whitman Bennett stated that pictures will be made by Billie Burke, George M. Cohan, Margaret Clark, Elsie Ferguson, Wallace Reid, Fred Stone, Enrico Caruso and John Barrymore, each of whom has definite acceptance having been received. Others now out on location have not been heard from yet, but there is no doubt as to their willingness.

Thomas H. Ince has written Mr. Zukor that in addition to separate pictures featuring Enid Bennett, Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray there will be a special Thomas H. Ince picture, in which the director himself will appear on the screen. He is busy with his idea of the proper way to sell Liberty Bonds. Two comedies also have been pledged by Mack Sennett, who promises that each will carry a punch that will be compelling as a bond-selling argument.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, in a long letter to Chairman Zukor, placed the alacrity of his company at the disposal of the committee, and further states that pictures will be made by the following Vitagraph stars: Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Gladys Leslie, Harry Morey, Corinne Griffith, Bessie Lowe and William Duncan. Mr. Smith and the entire Vitagraph scenario staff are now busily engaged in providing suitable stories and nothing will be permitted to stand in the way of completing the pictures on time.

From Lewis J. Selznick and Nicholas Schenck it is learned that Alice Brady, Norma Talmadge and Clara Kimball Young, Select stars, have accepted the invitation to make pictures.

In addition to Mme. Nazimova and Ethel Barrymore, both of whom will start work this week on their contributions, Metro announces that Harold Lockwood, Emily Stevens and Edith Storey have completed pictures.

Doug and Bill Have Finished Theirs.

Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart have already completed their pictures. While no definite word has yet been received from Mary Pickford, the committee believes it a foregone conclusion that she will not overlook the present opportunity.

Another acceptance received last week was that of Sessue Hayakawa, and both William and Dustin Farnum, the former with the Fox organization and the latter with the Sherman Pictures Corporation, telegraphed that their pictures have already been completed and are now in the process of being assembled.

William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, wrote a letter to Arthur Brisbane requesting that he write the story for the picture in which Jack Sherrill is to be starred. Mr. Brisbane not only wrote the story but wrote a column editorial commending the plans of the Zukor committee.

Charlie Chaplin Will Contribute.

Charlie Chaplin will make a picture, as his telegram to Frank R. Wilson, director of publicity, Treasury Department, indicates:

"Your letter at hand and I will make with pleasure a picture for the Fourth Liberty Loan and rush same as soon as possible to committee headed by Mr. Zukor."

To this message Mr. Wilson replied:

"We are certainly greatly pleased to receive your communication saying that you will make a film for Fourth Liberty Loan campaign. Your work in last campaign was very beneficial to loan, and I am sure you will be able to do a great deal to help us in the forthcoming drive. We have notified Mr. Zukor, who is in charge of production and distribution of these films. Best personal regards."

The Drews Will Work at Famous Players Studio.

Especially worthy of comment is the acceptance of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, one of the first to be received, for it will be recalled that Mr. Drew is the father of S. Rankin Drew, the first prominent American member of the motion picture industry to be killed in France. Mr. and Mrs. Drew, who are now appearing on the legitimate stage, wrote that they would be glad to make a picture, but owing to the fact that they had been forced to place their organization and had no studio to work in, would have to lend them one. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation immediately proffered the use of one of its Eastern studios to them, and they have agreed to have their contribution ready on time.

The title presentation of all the pictures will be uniform and will bear the official marks of the Treasury Department, together with an inscription to the effect that the picture was made and distributed through the co-operation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Owing to the fact that a very large number of prints must be made of these pictures in order that every theatre in the country may be served in the short space of three weeks, it is absolutely necessary that the pictures be completed at once. If not, the negative prints of any positive print of each picture must be in the hands of the committee by August 25, and the stipulation that no pictures will be accepted after that date will be rigidly enforced.

As promised, the pictures to be distributed to the exhibitors of the country free of charge, and it is planned to have the exhibitors run a different picture every day of the week. The handling of the distribution, it is expected, will be a comparatively simple matter, as there are to be three thousand prints in circulation. Walter W. Irwin has charge of this part of the committee's work and an announcement of his plans in detail may be expected sometime this week.

CreeL Lifts Ban on Air Photographs
Government Will Also Permit, Under Official Supervision, Taking Pictures of Construction.

ONE of the most important Government decisions relating to film news is that by which the ban was lifted Saturday, August 13, for four weeks from all United States air operations. It affects the whole field of news pictures, including newspaper photography as well as motion picture work. It will permit the news organizations of the country to use news pictures to appease the public appetite for such things, which has grown enormously.

The Universal, which operates Current Events, Animated World, and Screen Pictures, among other operations, has for a long time been striving for months to get the right to take aviation pictures, acted quickly when permission was finally flashed forth. The ban lifting notice was issued by Captain Lawawrence, of the United States Information Division. Inside of a few minutes Jack Cohn, in charge of Universal's news pictorials, telegraphed orders to all his men to bring in the distance of the twenty-six air camp, to get busy quick on good big aviation films.

The decision permits film men to take pictures, under official supervision, of course, of airplane construction as well as the actual flying affairs.

Film men express the belief that the tremendous aid they have given to the Liberty Loan Committee, Food and Fuel Administrations, Departments of Labor and Agriculture, Red Cross and other valuable services, and which has been striving for months to get the right to take aviation pictures, acted quickly when permission was finally flashed forth. EILEEN PERCY PLAYING FOR METRO.

Eileen Percy has been engaged by Metro to play opposite Bert Lytell in "Making Good," the story of which was written by Mr. Lytell in collaboration with George D. Baker, manager of Metro's Western coast department. Miss Percy's theatrical career dates back to "The Bachelor." At that time she played child parts in road productions traveling all over the country.

Four years after her entrance into the drama, Miss Percy joined the Ziegfeld Follies. It was while appearing in the Follies that she was induced to have a "test" picture taken. The photograph so beautifully that she was at once given a contract to play opposite Douglas Fairbanks in a series of his pictures.
Here Are Figures in "Crusaders" Contest

Now You Estimate for Yourself Your Standing in the Race for the Splendid Trophy Offered by the Moving Picture World to the Exchange Showing the Largest Relative Bookings for "Pershing's Crusaders"

H ere are the official figures to be used in determining the winners of the huge bronze trophy that particularly is to decorate the office of the exchange manager whose staff shows the greatest amount of hustle in getting "Pershing's Crusaders" before the public. These figures are official and are given for all First National Exchanges. The figures for the territories occupied by the State Committees of Defense are not yet announced, but will be given later. Working with these figures, a close race between ten of the eighteen exchanges, with plenty of time in which to change the figures. It should be remembered that to count in this contest all contracts should be reported before September 1, but they need not be for showings prior to that date. It is "bookings" and not "showings" upon which the contest is to be decided.

There is another heavy advance all along the line, as is shown by the advertising, and where the latest definite results are recorded. Last week you were given a table of bookings to that date. To get the new bookings you must record the red names and add these to the totals shown last week.

We think Des Moines must have been the right sort of employment—when they asked that the trophy be sent on at once without the mere formality of waiting for a count-up. They have 1,357 houses to draw upon and it is evident that a lot of towns are not going to see the film. This is a pity, because it is something that every man, woman and child in America should see. When you read that the raincoat companies are charged with turning out inferior product it is a comfort to turn to the film and to realize that raincoats are but a small feature of the great work being done. It takes all sorts of men to make a nation and it will cheer your heart to see how most of the men are plugging away at the film. Though you can take a single show out of these Government films it is not a patriot nor wise. To show them is a patriotic duty and to handle them right is to make money.

Of course you cannot merely book the film and then kick because Secretary Baker does not send a regiment from the nearest cantonment to bayonet the people into your house. That's the way it is done in Germany, not over here; but if you make the right sort of announcement and follow it up you'll be surprised to find that you can make as much money as you can with an one of the fifty-seven varieties of Chaplin films. Get the Boy Scouts out, coax the local basic workers into a picture "outing" and you'll get enough money to pay for the program feature you have had to shelve and you'll still show a profit.

J. J. Schenect, for example, has a house in Wagner, S. D. He put on the film properly with some tableaux and a lot of germane noise and he did so well that he is already asking for the next film in the series for two days instead of one and he wants it right out of Minneapolis. He showed to more than 1,000 persons for "Pershing's Crusaders," and he realizes that if he holds the film over the first day's audience is going to get out and press-agent the rest of the town.

It has been pretty hot in New York the past few weeks, yet the Cohen theatre has been crowded with paid admissions, and you hear more talk of "America's Answer" along Broadway than you do of the thousand and one "pimples" in the film's night. It is packed by the Knights of Columbus, then holding a convention here. A few days later the Mystic Shriners took the entire seating capacity, and another night was filled in by the Rotary Club. You can do the same thing in your own town with "Pershing's Crusaders." You can sell seats by the block instead of singly, and you can keep your house filled.

Lee L. Goldberg, of Louisville, reports that even the tanks and the mining camps are handling the picture at a profit. All you have to do is to create the right sort of atmosphere and the film will do the rest. You can get the local notables to make speeches, you can call in the singers and musicians and have the biggest time since the circus was in town, and you will be making money and you'll have the handsome Government-awarded Victory Screen Pledge to hang on your lobby and show that you have done your bit. Have a little local pride. Help out your local exchange. If the salesman does not get around to you in time, telegraph in. Don't wait. Do it today if you did not do it yesterday. Remember, it is not to help the First National. It's to help your country.

We present below the latest figures on the standing of the contestants, giving the total bookings to date, so far as they have been recorded and approved. It will be seen that New Orleans is getting busy now and Chicago has taken a decided jump. Almost all of the exchanges have advanced their figures and even Washington is showing the ample bookings through the District and Maryland and Delaware combined still show but 15 bookings out of a quota of 323. But a very respectable total of 1,277 houses has been played, and the returns are still incomplete with several districts open.

Books to Date for "Pershing's Crusaders."

NOTE:—The figures given below do not represent the standing of the various contestants, but merely give the bookings recorded to date of going to press. It throws some light on the matter, but does not supply material from which the outcome may be adjudged.

WALRaven Goes to Coast.

J. Hesser Walraven, for some time press representative for Paralta, has resigned and will go to San Francisco to take the management of the Rialto theatre in that city.
House to Lay 5 Per Cent. Rental Tax
Ways and Means Committee Also to Recommend Doubling of Annual Impt on Theatres.

MOTION PICTURES are to pay a much larger share of the war expenses during the coming year, if the House Ways and Means Committee, which is expected to make an agreement on new revenue-raising measures, is agreed to by the members of the House Ways and Means Committee are later adopted by the House itself and by the Senate. It is expected the committee will conduct hearings and propose a new 5 per cent. tax on ticket sales. The committee is also expected to make recommendations August 19. There will probably be some changes made in the House of Representatives, but substantial changes will be adopted in the lower house as reported by the committee.

Congress has to raise eight billion dollars. To do so, it is said by the financial experts of the Government, necessities double or triple taxes. In addition to new methods of revenue-raising because of changes that must be made to smooth out the laws. The film industry will, unless the business takes a slump as a result of the extra burden, pay more than double what it is now called upon to provide.

When the committee representing the whole industry was here some time ago it recommended the adoption of a rentals tax to be paid by the exhibitor, presumably to replace the present footage tax. The congress committee has seized upon the idea and has figured out a rate of 5 per cent. of the amount paid for ticket sales, instead of the $500 rental fees of today. The committee has decided that the exhibitors make a profit on the 15 cents a reel a day assessment made upon them to meet the franchise tax. In order to total up the cost of a show, the contention has been that this is burdensome, particularly on the cheaper shows, but it will not be half as burdensome as a per cent. tax. While the cinema whose daily rentals are under $15 will benefit by the new plan, the exhibitor who is in the habit of paying $50 a day for his films will have to come across with $2.50, more than three times his present tax cost. The manufacturers get out from under.

Woud Double Annual Tax.
A theatre, including moving picture shows, museums and concert halls having a seating capacity of not over 250 will have to pay up $500 a year in taxes, instead of the $300 a year now being paid. For each additional 200 seats, the annual tax will increase by $100; where between 500 and 900 the rate is increased from $90 to $100; where between 500 and 900 to $110 from $75, and where the capacity is over 900, the tax is jumped from $100 to $300.

As tentatively agreed upon, the admission taxes are doubled and, further, a one-cent tax is to be imposed upon all admissions which do not exceed seven cents.

As stated above, all of the taxes are doubled or more than doubled, and the exhibitors will have to pay taxes of the same nature as they are paying now. There are the levies on freight and express shipments, insurance, inland transportation, telephone and telegraph messages, and many others, all of which go to increase the overhead cost in theatre operations.

If the industry is to do anything toward easing up this burden, the problem should be taken up by a committee of exhibitors—for it is the exhibitors who are vitally interested—with the members of the Senate Finance Committee. It is declared that many theatres will darken their doors under so heavy a burden as this. Congress wants to get $8,000,000,000, but not at the risk of closing up any industry—it does not want to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

Film Now May Be Exported to Sweden
War Trade Board Will Consider Applications for Licenses Subject to Specified Regulations.

EXPORTERS interested in the movement of merchandise to Sweden are being informed that the War Trade Board will consider applications for licenses to export various commodities to Sweden. The exportation of all commodities to that country. Exporters in the United States, before filing applications for export licenses, must obtain from the government certificate of credit for the exportation of the good in Sweden. Sweden has, as is well known, been visited by an appropriate importing association or by the States Handel's Kommission a certificate covering the proposed consignment. The number of the certificate should be inserted in the application, and the certificate will be the only one which will be accepted. The number should be specified on Supplemental Information Sheet X-104, which must be duly executed and annexed to the application for an export license.

Applications for licenses to Sweden of commodities for which a Handel's Kommission certificate or an importing association certificate is required will be considered only in the event that the application is received prior to the date specified in the certificate, which must be in effect, subject to June 14. Certificates issued prior to that date will be treated as void.

Porto Rico Has a Censorship Rumble Moral Crusade Sweeping Over Island Aims a Shot at Two Motion Pictures But Fails to Score Hit.

San Juan, Porto Rico August 1.

The moral crusades that have been sweeping over San Juan this summer, and the vitriolic letter written by an actress against some of the films exhibited in the theater and resulted, on Saturday, in the seizure of two films by orders of Insular Chief of Police Shanton, who had them placed in charge of the police department, have seized the time making a statement to the court of just why the films had been seized.

On Saturday afternoon, at the suggestion of Judge Caste-jon, a party of about twenty well known persons gathered at the Cine Luna to witness an exhibition of the films in question and to act as a censorship committee, in conjunction with Judge Castejon and Colonel Shanton and to assist in selecting the proper films, there being many books now published and found in public libraries are not inclined for young people. But there is nothing essentially indecent or immoral in the scenes depicted. The suggestion was made that, in these days when pictures to be shown are so well advertised in the press, it is more a matter for parents to determine whether or not their children shall visit the houses where such pictures are exhibited.

The two films that were seized are "One Hour," which was shown to large audience at the Park Cine a few nights ago, and "The Victim," a powerful picture of the melodrama type that has been largely criticized by the photopaths have been passed by the censors on the mainland.

Upon the findings of the special committee, Judge Caste-jon decided to release the films and they will accordingly be shown.

Colonel Shanton made the statement that his action in seizing the films was based upon the fact that both Governor Yager and himself had received a number of complaints from persons who had reason to believe the moral tone of the films were of a high immoral character and not fit to be seen by girls and young women.

"Four Years in Germany" is being widely advertised throughout the island and one or two private exhibitions have been given prior to its public release here. The film is being shown by West Indies Films, Inc., represented here by Mr. C. P. Mason.

Judging from the popularity of "The Kaiser," "My Four Years in Germany" will have big business.

BOARD OF REVIEW PRAISES "SALOME."

In a special report, the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has declared, following a private screening of "Salome," that the Fox-Theda Bara drama "should rank with the best screen productions." The report of the board was as follows:

"We wish to advise you that the majority comment on your photoplay 'Salome' was as follows: Entertainment value, excellent; educational value, good; technical handling, good; costume; fine; atmospheric quality, scenic setting, convincing; historical value, considerable; moral effect, good. General comment: In the opinion of those present this production was a serious and dignified portrayal of the story of Salome, imaginative and dramatic, and presented in a way that should rank with the best screen productions."

Ruffner Uses Butte Fire Department

Western Manager Uses City Fire Department to Ballyhoo Daily for Selig "Still Alarm" and Works In "House of Hate"

CERTAINLY it has to be handed to Ralph R. Ruffner, of the Rialto Theatre, Butte, Mont. He used the city fire department of Butte to ballyhoo for his presentation of Selig's "The Still Alarm" and he did it for three days hand running. More than one manager has borrowed a policeman or fireman for lobby work, and marines have "plugged" other products, but we think Mr. Ruffner is the first to use the fire department of a regular town for ballyhoo purposes for the full three days of a run.

When he saw Selig was releasing a five reel version of the play that was one of the forerunners of the "practical props" school of melodrama he thought he saw a chance to do something real for a change. He had seen the play back in 1890—"when I was a very small boy," to quote his own words—and he got busy. About a month ahead of the showing he had the picture sent to the house and ran it before a select gathering including Chief Martin, of the Fire Department; the Mayor of Butte, the State Fire Marshal, the City Council and other city officials. Chief Martin was the man he was after, but he got them all in that none might be offended. Then he sent the reels back and booked them for a three-day showing after he had convinced the fire chief that here was a chance to show the citizens of Butte what a fine department they had. Just to be a good sport he was willing to have a crowd in front of the Rialto, since that was a good place to see from, and he would let them have it just before the matinee, because there would be a lot of people down that way, anyhow, coming to the matinee. The Chief and the Mayor seemed to feel the same way about it, and anyhow Ruffner was a good fellow, and so they took the scheme in. They got together and laid out a program. An alarm was to be turned in, the apparatus would roll up and they would see how long it would take to get to the top of the fire story theatre and throw a stream. Then Ruff would have someone in readiness to be "rescued" and the people could see how that was done. It is not recorded that Ruff told them that the Hooded Terror would be the one to be rescued, but probably he had it in mind all the time.

Then Ruff went to work on his advertising campaign. There were two daily papers and so both carried full pages on the opening day. Throughout it was announced as an "exhibition" by the Fire Department, and not as a ballyhoo. Of course the galloping horses and the flaming letters helped along the display, but there possibly are still some people in Butte who think it was fortunate that Ruffner happened to have a fire play about the time the Fire Department decided to have a display.

Just to help things along the city hall is only a block away, and the old fire bell was used to sound the alarm, "Box 61" being that nearest the house. The crowds were tremendous and packed the sidewalks long before the box was pulled. Trucks and a pumping engine dashed up, the aerial ladder was raised, with a fireman perched on the top rung, others stood in readiness to run up the hose and inside of 90 seconds from the start of the ladder there was a stream playing upon an imaginary fire on the roof of the building, which equals in height the average six story building.

Of course some water came down on the crowd, but that only helped the fun along, and presently a shout arose as a diminutive "hooded terror" appeared in a window on the fourth floor with agonized appeals to be saved. The crowd...
Levy Tries New House Plan in Seattle

Western Manager Turns His 2100-Seat Orpheum Into a Home for Long Runs with Big Features.

THERE has been a great deal of discussion of late on just how long motion pictures would continue to attract the public as a source of amusement. There is little comparison in the motion pictures of yesterday and to-day in regard to stories, productions and stars—yet there is little doubt that the motion pictures of the future will be larger theatres, with more production put out on a more spectacular footing than the city and the same in a manner as a legitimate show, carrying their own advance agents, managers and probably orchestras.

In this movement Mr. Levy has led the first big producers to start this movement, and they have been handsomely rewarded for their pioneering along this line. Naturally the next step would be where and how these productions are shown. Many of the motion picture theatres are usually booked so solid that there is little chance to break into them on a percentage basis, while the larger legitimate houses are so situated that they cannot juggle their bookings in order to accommodate the pictures.

Eugene Levy, manager and owner of Levy's Orpheum, Seattle, Wash., has looked into the future in regard to this matter and has practically changed the policy of his millions of dollars' worth of business by ordering an addition and remodeling of the theatre into an amusement house for handling only the biggest films on the market either by buying them outright, playing on a percentage basis or renting the theatre through policies.

Mr. Levy started his new policy with D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World." So great was the success that the production ran to its fifth week, smashing all records in Seattle for a long engagement. Mr. Levy has installed a forty-piece orchestra under Frank Alderman.

Levy Believes in Display Advertising.

Mr. Levy is also a great believer in large display advertising. He secured the services of Vic Gaultlett, who started off the campaign on "Hearts of the World" by taking out a one column picture in the Sunday Mirror of Seattle. He then followed it up with a series of advertisements that has hammered the public from all angles, with the result that capacity houses attended every showing of "Hearts of the World." Mr. Levy has booked to follow "Hearts of the World" Theda Bara's latest screen offering, "Salome," and there is little doubt there will be another box office break and a big profit.

In regard to the new policy of his theatre Mr. Levy says: "I am after the biggest productions on the market and will pay any price in order to secure the ones I want. I feel that Seattle is now willing to pay a nominal admission price to see the best motion picture offerings, as they have already shown in 'Hearts of the World.' If the motion picture companies would turn out more big productions, more pictures in the distribution of which could be advertised, I have, for really, when you stop to think, the motion picture business of the future will be along these lines. Although I am pioneering I feel confident that I will blaze the way as a number of other large houses throughout the United States follow my example."

ANNUAL DIRECTORS' MEETING HELD.

Following a luncheon at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, the annual directors' meeting of the Motion Picture Industry of Northern California held its annual directors' meeting on July 31, which resulted in the unanimous re-election of the officers. They are: President, Louis Reichert; vice president, Eugene Roth; secretary, Norman Eisner; treasurer, Sam Levin; directors; M. J. Cohen, Eugene Roth, Howard J. Shechter, Louis Reichert, J. A. Partington, Sam Levin, Norman Eisner and Herman Wobber. Problems pertaining to the industry were discussed and arrangements of large productions of the year were considered satisfactory.

Semi-Annual New York Trips Necessary

So Declares John Hazza of Alberta, Who Comes a Distance to Pick up the Latest Angles.

A MONG the well-known men from out of town who visited New York during August was John Hazza, general manager of the Northwest Theatres Company, Limited, of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, and one of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Limited, of Canada.

Mr. Hazza's visit to New York was for the purpose of getting into personal touch with business conditions at home, executives, and to attend to several important metropolitan film premieres liable to help him in arranging his own plans for the coming season.

"I find a semi-annual trip to New York absolutely indispensable to a procedure company and find a film exhibiting pictures in a high class way," said Mr. Hazza in the course of a brief interview. "Important events in the film industry occur so frequently and conditions change so rapidly that we must keep in touch with New York ideas to maintain his place in the procession."

As the proprietor of the Empress and the Bijou Theatres in Edmonton, Mr. Hazza can speak from the practical viewpoint of the experienced showman in this connection.

"We recently played Ambassador Gerard's 'My Four Years in Germany' for a full week to record business," Mr. Hazza went on. "We handled it in the northwest—the same spell of weather you New Yorkers were suffering under when I arrived here. It is only once or twice a week we are able to keep a picture in one week as at Edmonton where 'My Four Years in Germany' the patronage grew steadily from day to day. Prior to the regular opening we gave a special exhibition of the picture for Lieutenant-Governor Brett of the Province of Alberta, the Exhibitors' Association and a number of local newspaper editors. As a result, public interest in the production was keyed up highly, despite the terrific heat."

Mr. Hazza made some interesting comment on the daylight saving law as it is applied in his part of the world.

"There was really no necessity for putting the plan into operation in the Canadian northwest," he stated, "as we naturally have very long days and short nights throughout the summer months. I suppose it was inevitable as long as the rest of Canada and the United States had adopted it. The moving pictures suffered considerably at first, I suppose, but after the daylight saving took hold there was a great upsurge in attendance, as people spent their time playing outdoor games, and forgot about the pictures. But now conditions are getting back to normal again."

An Exhibition native of Toronto, Mr. Hazza has made his home in Edmonton for several years past, although retaining substantial property interests in Toronto.

WIDEAWAKE EXHIBITORS USE PHONOGRAPHS.

Many progressive exhibitors have been quick to take advantage of the phonograph by placing it in every theatre and advertising the "Sing Along." A well-known phone company which is announcing the production of a record containing "Pershing's Own Voice from the Battlefields," and "Ambassador Gerard's Address on Loyalty," is the Pathe Brothers' Phonograph Co. When showing "Pershing's Crusaders" or "My Four Years in Germany," several alert First National exhibitors have been quick to take advantage of the opportunity presented to install a phonograph on the stage or in the lobby to run this timely record.

In many of the towns the newspaper publicity received for the innovation has simply repaid the exhibitors for the small extra expense involved.

BROOKS EXPLOITATION MANAGER FOR PATHE.

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the appointment of Edgar O. Brooks as exploitation manager, a new office, which position he is to be of benefit to the company. Mr. Brooks, who has had many years' experience in the motion picture and theatrical business and is connected with Pathe's sales department, comes to this important task after a long service in exposure every way to have the exhibitor hold on to how to cash in with their motion picture programs.

While in California during the past winter Commodore Blackton sub-let his plant to William Fox. This contract has expired.
Schaefer and Rembusch Get Together

Everything Points to a Successful Convention of the Whole Trade—More Strictly, a Great Business Conference.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH, secretary of the convention committee, of the A. E. A. National Convention, came into Chicago Tuesday evening, August 13, and one of the first important things he did was to hold a conference with Peter J. Schaefer, president of the M. P. E. L. of A. The initial meeting took place Wednesday and was continued the following days.

Both men are good friends, of ten years' standing, and while many things were discussed it need scarcely be stated nothing was given out at this time, except that President Schaefer has agreed to address the national convention at one of its sessions and to act as toastmaster at one of the daily luncheons.

The convention committee has mailed a letter to every state president and secretary of the M. P. E. L. of A. and of the A. E. A., requesting them to participate in the approaching convention and to bring with them reports of the conditions in each state, with the object of ascertaining how a national organization can be most helpful to the industry as a whole.

As previously stated in these columns, the leading men in the trade—including producers, distributors and supply men—have been invited to attend, and it is also hoped by the convention committee that exhibitors from all parts of the country, irrespective of affiliation with either organization now existing, will come on to take part in this great business conference of the industry.

The object and the plan of this convention, it is again emphasized, are wholly away from those formulated and carried out at any preceding convention. Everyone in the moving picture business, who has a message to deliver for the general good of the industry, is cordially invited, and he will be given an opportunity to voice it and a respectful hearing.

Secretary Rembusch announces that prominent speakers will positively appear at fixed hours each day, and that the balance of the time will be devoted to a general discussion of the trade by those present. In other words, the convention will be a great get-together meeting, where important topics will be amicably discussed for the good of all concerned.

During the first four days the proceedings will be confined strictly to the discussion of business and its condition, and politics will be positively excluded.

On Friday, September 6, there will be an open business meeting for exhibitors, whether they belong to an organization or not. Some of the subjects to be discussed on that day are the tax question, Sunday opening, censorship, better pictures, efficiency and economy in production, distribution and presentation of pictures; the organization of the industry so that it shall become more powerful, active and representative in a national sense; advertising, technical art of the picture, etc.

Some of the prominent men in the trade who have already promised to attend and address the convention are William Fox, William A. Brady, Walter W. Irvin, Samuel L. Roth-
One Hundred Comedies in One Hundred Weeks.

On August 19 the Christie Comedy Company rounded out a period of 100 weeks, during which time a hundred comedies were produced and released. The hundredth comedy, "Does Your Husband Flirt?" The Christie Brothers are rather proud of their record, and of the fact that they have actual financial proof that their comedies are steadily gaining in favor. The Christie films feature the loves and tragedies of youth. The near-tragic incidents that happen to every pair of lovers before and after marriage are treated in a serio-humorous manner that recalls the exaggerated woes of the early romances of the elderly couples who comprise the coming troubles of the young lovers who view the films.

During the past few months three of the Christie leading men have gone to war—Harry Ham, Neal Burns and Jimmy Harrison. Jay Belasco expects to be called at any time, and Pathe Edwards and Bobby Vernon have just enlisted in the Navy.

Clarine Seymour is a new member of the Christie forces and will make her how opposite Bobby Vernon in an early release.

Paton Celebrates Birthday.

Stuart Paton, directing Diano western companies, was presented with a platinum chain by W. A. S. Douglas and Leon T. O-borne and with a gold watch by members of the company in the occasion of his birthday, which was celebrated at the home of Howard Crampton, and which was attended by a large number of film celebrities.

Seven Companies Working at Brunton Plant.

Seven film producing companies are now installed at the Robert Brunton studios and are working on productions. Patara has two companies, one with Louise Glauin, and the other with Bessie Barriscale. Mme. Yorska is working on her first film for the Matzene corporation. Helen Keller, the famous blind girl, is also at work on her first feature for the Helen Keller Film Corporation. Susse Hayakawa, an old-timer at the plant, is making his third picture for the Haworth Pictures, and Frank Keenan is doing Pathé features.

The seventh company is headed by Marie Dressler, who is working on comedies.

Kerrigan Moves to Hollywood.

J. Warren Kerrigan has moved from the old Selig studios at Edendale to the Willis and Inglis studios in Hollywood, where work is progressing on "Three X Gordon," a story directed by Kenneth Clarke. Later an Alaskan story by the same author will be filmed. Wallace Kerrigan, brother of the star, is seen in his old capacity around the plant, as studio manager, and Lois Wilson is playing the opposite lead in the picture. Negotiations between Jesse Hampton, business manager for Kerrigan, and Mrs. Richard Harding Davis are being made for the film rights of "Soldiers of Fortune" and "Ransom's Folly."

Harold Bell Wright Productions Coming.

Harold Bell Wright, noted novelist, has organized a company for the production of his best sellers for the screen, and sets have been erected in a studio in Hollywood for certain scenes to be made for the first picture, "The Little Shepherd of the Hills," the exterior scenes to be made on the mountains beyond Pasadena.

George McDaniel, who has played leading roles in Lasky and Fox productions during the past two years, has been engaged by Mr. Wright as leading man in the first production. Mr. McDaniel has appeared in the Victor Herbert Opera Company in New York, and in stock companies, also in New York. Also in the Shepherd of the Hills, work will be started on "The Calling of Dan Matthews."

Jesse L. Lasky in Town.

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles the first week in August, to remain his usual six weeks. Mr. Lasky is quoted as saying that Los Angeles is to be the haven of motion picture producers this winter. The schedule of the Famous Players-Lasky stars has been arranged so that while all of them may not be here at the same time, they will all be here at some time or other during the winter, excepting Caruso, he says.

Howells Confers with Tally.

David Howells, foreign representative for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has been in Los Angeles the past week in conference with T. L. Tally, vice president of the organization, regarding future plans for the foreign bookings of the Circuit's productions.

Film Producers trim Pool Extras.

In order to comply with the "work or fight" ruling, the motion picture producers in Southern California have evolved a plan whereby the men employed as extras at the different studios will be secured through a central agency, which will have the authority of a sufficient number to protect the interests of the motion picture industry. This plan will give practically steady employment to about four hundred men, whereas the original number of men who found occasional work on film studios, or in mob or crowd scenes, has been estimated at 1,200. Draft board officials announced that they would not recognize the organization, but they would cooperate so that the picture concerns would be protected and that no plan would necessitate longer working hours for the extras in most cases.

Lightless Nights in Los Angeles.

Monday and Tuesday night of each week have been designated as light saving nights for the city of Los Angeles. Motion picture theatres are not permitted to use display lights or electric signs, nor more light in the lobby than is necessary to conduct business on those two nights. One violation of the rule the first night the law went into effect was witnessed in a Broadway playhouse. The proprietor was warned not to commit a second offence, as he would then be held liable to s knowingly which would probably be the loss of all light privileges for a certain period.

Theatre Attendant Killed by Negroes.

Emerson Schooler, 16 years old, doorkeeper of the Angelus Theatre, was stabbed by two negro boys whom he had ordered to leave the premises about 1:30 a.m. Saturday morning. The boys had opened the door and been admitted. Two negroes came into the theatre, attacked the attendant, shot him with a razor in the face, and robbed him. The negro boys were captured and admitted having fought with the theatre attendant, but denied that they had stabbed him.

Godwin Repairs Wrong.

R. M. Godwin, director of the School of Expression, who was accused of having swindled several young women out of various sums of money in not keeping his promise to teach them the art of acting before the camera and to find them work on film studios, appeared in court and testified that he had been called in the draft and that he had not intended to perpetrate any fraud. He agreed to turn over part of his army pay until the young women were reimbursed for the money he had collected from them.

Film Stars Aid War War.

At the Allied War Trophy Exhibit held in Exposition Park from August 1 to 11 a number of film stars from the various studios assisted in entertaining the multitudes of people that daily formed the audiences because they had slipped through another entrance and had taken seats near the front of the house. Young Schooler noticed the boys and made them leave by a rear door. The boys heaped abuse on him and dared him to come out. A few minutes later a patron coming that way saw the boy lying near the rear entrance and the two negro boys running down the alley. Schooler was taken to a hospital, but all attempts to revive him failed, and he died. The negro boys were captured and admitted fighting with the theatre attendant, but denied that they had stabbed him.
Hart to Take Active Part in Fourth Loan Drive.

William S. Hart is preparing to do his bit in the coming Fourth Liberty Loan drive by making a featurette, for which he wrote the story himself, and by making arrangements to drop all cinema work during the drive to go on a speaking tour as he did during the Third Liberty Loan drive.

Picture Previews.

Quinn's Rialto gave a private showing of "To Hell With the Kaiser," one morning last week, and invited some two hundred sailors and soldiers to view the film, filling up the remainder of the house with city officials and newspaper folk.

The Boys of the Susse Hayakawa features, "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk," were given a private showing to a number of invited guests in the projection room of the Brunot studios.

New Members to Miller Theatre Company.

Several Northern theatricalists have become interested in the new Miller Theatre that is going up on Broadway, owned by Fred and Roy Miller and Harry Leonhard. J. L. Gottstein of the Greater Theatres Company, of the Northwest, and M. M. Bonson and associates, have been making arrangements to some extent in the new theatre, which promises to be one of the most up-to-date and modern on the west coast. Robert Bartleson has been engaged as secretary and assistant manager of the house.

Clune's Auditorium Renovated.

A thorough process of renovating and beautifying has been going on at Clune's Auditorium in preparation for the run of D. W. Griffith's new Artcraft picture, "A Great Love," which opens on an engagement at Clune's, where J. M. Miller, manager of the house, and Theodore Newman, general manager of the Clune interests, have not overlooked the least little thing in the way of added comforts and pleasures for the patrons of the house.

New Theatre for Hill Street.

A new theatre is being planned by Alexander Pantages to be erected on the lot at Seventh and Hill Streets, adjoining the Los Angeles Athletic Club, which may cost all the way up to a million dollars. Mr. Pantages has not decided yet whether to make the building five or twelve stories, but he wants nine store rooms and the theatre a thing of classic beauty.

Service Star is Admission.

The Los Angeles Herald, an evening paper, was host to mothers, sweethearts and sisters of soldiers and sailors at the Kinema Theatre one afternoon last week between the hours of 12 and 5, during the run of "The Service Star," with Madame Kennedy in the leading role. All that was required of the guests was that they show their service star and pay the war tax.

Kehrlein finds Business Good.

Emile Kehrlein, of the Kehrlein Kinema Circuit, which includes theatres in Oakland and Fresno, has returned from a visit to those two cities, and declares that although he found no place of amusement where people were being turned away, business conditions were good, and none of the exhibitors spoke to him otherwise.

The Alhambra Theatre boasts a splendidly new augmented orchestra, which has been engaged to play afternoons and evenings during the run of the war films, such as "Dershing's Crusaders," which have been and will continue to be a feature of this house.

Jack Curtis, former assistant manager of Clune's Auditorium, has left for New York, motoring with friends as far as San Francisco.
Little Thrills of the Week

Filmdom has been thrilled to its innermost core by the report that Theda Bara is to be married. Theda denies the story and says that her usual "will never be wedded to anything but my Art." The gentleman in the case is said to be named Palmer, but whether or not his first name is Arthur cannot be learned at this writing.

Charles Chaplin rises to remark that the story of his reported engagement to Mildred Harris, whom he usually calls his coxcomber, Mr. Shirk, is one of the hardest stories around the place.

Down at the box office, the box office is also the office of the local society. (The other lady to the right wearing a similar dress and curious name is no lady of the scene, but a long-time house guest, who is making a few movies during his vacation.)

The two ladies ascending the steps are Mayme Kelson and Nina Byron. Standing near the door to the rig you see two of the most celebrated figures of the film, the De Mille brothers, Cecil and William, who will soon direct Washburn, now being directed by Cecil De Mille. Unhinging herself through the door in another hour, Elliott Dexter.

The little lady entering the scene from the stage is Frances Marion, writer of Lady, your assumption is wrong. "Cute" begins with a C. We do not know what the Q in Miss Nilsson's name stands for. The name of the secretary is not given but it is a piece of the back firing of the disabled autos has long been stilled by the dull thud of the rubber tires on the smooth part of the scenery and publicity departments.

Today's thrilling auto is that are parked at the curb for the distance of the entire block, and not a flyer among them. All of which comes belongs to the people who work here.

All of which teaches us that the way to make a movie is to direct a studio on a plot of ground formerly occupied by a garage and garage with a large pipe, the large pipe is Kenneth McGaffey, head of the publicity department. The coupling of this was done with the nicest of results. It was not intended.

Across the hall is the office of Adam Hill Shirk, whose name is not unknown to the pages of our periodical literature in the eyes of all the old hands. Mr. Shirk is one of the hardest workers around the place.

Down at the box office, the box office is also the office of the local society. (The other lady to the right wearing a similar dress and curious name is no lady of the scene, but a long-time house guest, who is making a few movies during his vacation.)

Organize Large Exchange In Canada

A DISTINCT surprise was sprung in Canadian film circles last week by the withdrawal of two officials from prominent Canadian organizations to establish a brand new exchange for the handling of special productions throughout the Western Hemisphere. Charlie Kenyon, general manager of Superfeatures, Limited, Toronto, and F. R. Lennon, assistant general sales manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, Toronto, have left their concern for the purpose of forming a new exchange.

Mr. Kenyon is the owner of the Globe Films, Limited, Toronto, and the owner of three Toronto moving picture theatres, the Globe, Rialto and U-Kum.

Mr. Lennon is the Canadian rights for Paralta releases and a number of state right productions. Mr. Stevens recently returned from New York City, where he secured the Canadian rights for the special release, "The Still Alarm." Mr. Kenyon will be the president of the new company, which will be known as the National Film Incorporation, Limited.

It is the announced intention to open offices of the company in Montreal, Winnipeg and other Canadian cities.

These are to be established before the month is over. The company proposes to specialize with state right productions and special releases of various kinds.

J. R. McKenney becomes assistant general sales manager of the Canadian Universal in succession to Mr. Lennon. Mr. McKenney has been a star salesman of the Universal for a number of years and lately assumed office duties in Toronto. Mr. Lennon was with the Canadian Universal for ten years, being first employed by Jules and J. J. Allen when they controlled the Canadian Universal rights.

Incidentally, J. A. Kirkpatrick has joined the sales force of the Canadian Universal at Toronto and will cover the northern Ontario territory. The city of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, has also sold his Princess theatre in order to be associated with Mr. McKenney in the Toronto office.

Good Cheer from the "Bread Basket"

James V. Bryson Sees New York and Talks of Prosperity In the Wheat Belt.

JAMES V. BRYSON was a welcome visitor at the offices of the Moving Picture World during the past week. It was the film man's first look-in on the new quarters, which have been set aside by Mr. Bryson in New York. Mr. Bryson was for eight years known in the Northwest territory as the head of the Laemmle Film Service before recently he has been working independently in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Montana booking "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and "Come Through." As his territory is pretty well cleaned up he has made a trip to New York, according to Mr. Bryson, with the view of taking on new productions.

The Brysons made the trip from Minneapolis by automobile, fifteen days being covered by the journey. Stops were made in Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Paul, Des Moines, Davenport, Quad Cities in Illinois and South Dakota, the trip taking nearly three in Toronto. These visits enabled the Northwesterner to get the eastern angle on the market and verify the observations he has made in his own territory.

"Out in the Northwest the exhibitors are more enthusiastic," said Mr. Bryson. "Of course, there everything is based on the viewpoint of the farmer—and the farmer is happy. He is having a remarkable season. The sun has shone when he wanted it to shine and the rain has fallen when most he desired it. The farmer will get right down to brass tacks with you and count the grains on a stalk to show you that this year is a banner year. Just for an illustration as to financial conditions in the agricultural districts I might remark that I have seen in New York more Ford cars than I have noticed recently in the farming sections. The man of the soil is driving big cars these days—and expensive ones, too.

"Up in Canada conditions look good—that is, so far as they may be judged from what I saw in Toronto and Hamilton. Exhibitors seem to have more faith in the future. I noticed the different houses and opera houses are being fixed up their houses and expanding generally. The exchange men you meet have brighter faces. They have got back their confidence. The war taxes, too, bear down on the situation, of course.

"In the smallest towns you would be surprised to find the number of first class houses depending on the exhibition of such a feature, as the Northwest territory 25 cents general admission is a common thing in practically all towns. Exhibitors are beginning to appreciate the value of advertising and of the twenty-five cent price for admission.

"You will notice the marked increase in the number of boards.

"As to the star problem? My opinion is that the salvation of the industry lies in the star.

Mr. Bryson, who will be in town for another week, is stopping at the Hotel Markwell, Forty-ninth and Broadway.

Shows Woman's Land Army at Work

Universal Makes Picture for Private Exhibition, but May Give It General Release.

HARRY LEVEY, director of the industrial department of Universal, has official word from New Jersey that the player in "Give Me a Ring" from the the Salvation of a State," were actually the heroines in a real life drama, and that the scenes were vital in the affairs of New Jersey. The picture is New Jersey's unit of the Woman's Land Army at work. The women are shown at work in the fields.

If it weren't for the Woman's Land Army the crop of New Jersey would be lost. This is the message reported by Miss Constance, field secretary of the Army, who was one of those who helped make the picture. Officials of the State Departments of Agriculture have notified the Woman's Land Army leaders that their work has been their own personal interest.

New Jersey farmers have proved themselves this season to be intensely patriotic. They planted vastly greater acreage than ever before. Meantime the young men of the farms have volunteered into military or munition plant manufacturing service.

As matters were approaching a crisis in the last few weeks, state officials sent out a plea to the women. There was a response from the girls in Greater New Jersey and the numbers of the organization swelled.

The Universal film shows the women volunteering on a particular farm, and the camera follows them after they get the job. It shows, in four rapid stages, the change in attitude and behavior of the men. Although the Land Army film had been intended for release independently to clubs and women's societies for private showing, Universal officials have declared they are willing to place it on the market for regular distribution.

The Moving Picture World.
Exhibitor Merger Now Seems Assured

Peter J. Schaefer, Louis H. Frank and Frank J. Rembusch And a Comment on the Important Item Is Issued

S INCE mailing the convention article which appears in this issue under the Motion Picture Exhibitors heading, the following statement was given out from the headquarters of the American Exhibitors’ Association, this city, Thursday afternoon, August 15:

“Louis H. Frank and Frank Rembusch called upon Peter J. Schaefer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, to invite the League to attend the convention of the American Exhibitors’ Association which will be held in Chicago, September 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7.

“Mr. Schaefer stated that it was the consensus of opinion at the Boston meeting that there should be an amalgamation of both the national organizations.

“Messrs. Rembusch and Frank stated that there was nothing in the way now to prevent amalgamation and that the American Exhibitors’ Association would welcome such a move.

“Mr. Schaefer agreed to call a meeting at once of the executive committee of the League in order to take whatever action is necessary to bring about harmony between all concerned.

“All parties agreed that a new organization and by-laws would be necessary, and that both organizations would receive the profit of the new body.

“It was the unanimous opinion that all side issues, trade shows, expositions, booking circuits, etc., should have no place in a national organization, but that the purpose of the new organization should be to protect the industry from adverse legislation, censorship, unjust taxation, and to work for constructive objectives that effect the entire industry, and especially the motion picture exhibitor.

Exhibitors’ Association.

“FRANK J. REMBUSCH, National Secretary.”

This statement affords the most cheering and gratifying news for the industry, which has been announced for years past, and heartily congratulations are extended Messrs. Schaefer, Rembusch and Frank for showing a way out of the vexatious difficulties which have seriously affected the business conditions in the past. It is hoped that the way will lead up to a permanent settlement of the differences between the rival organizations, and that it will end in the formation of a single body which will represent not only the interests of the exhibitors but of every other department of the moving picture industry.

It is obligatory on the entire business in these days of war stress that everybody engaged in it should form a united body to assist the Government in every way possible to bring the war to a close in the shortest time possible. Enthusiastic, concerted and prolonged action is needed by the Government from the people in our industry, and since moving picture screens throughout the country afford the most effective means for government propaganda work it is the patriotic duty of every exhibitor to do his best in this respect. Let every exhibitor, therefore, become a member of the exhibitors’ organization that will be formed during the A. E. A. convention in September.

The last paragraph of the statement signed by National Secretary Rembusch outlines a notable departure from the policy of former national organizations of exhibitors. “All side issues, trade shows, expositions, booking circuits, etc., are to have no place in the new national organization, which will work for the interests of the entire trade and especially for the exhibiting department.

This policy, when carried out, will give the exhibitor a new standing. He cannot help holding his head higher. Why should he go begging for a mob? Why should he expect producers to undergo great loss of time and expense to make his show a success? A producer will never open his business by bringing the public in contact with the photoplayers, who cannot fail to lose some of their attractiveness on the screen by being ‘exhibited’ to the mob?

Yes, indeed, this will be a departure devoutly to be wished by the exhibitors and producers.

I called on President Schaefer, of the M. P. E. L. of A., Friday noon, Aug. 16, and found him in a happy mood. He returned from his vacation Monday, August 12, which has lasted since the Boston convention adjourned, and looked fit for any undertaking, strenuous or otherwise.

He spoke of the social and friendly chats with Mr. Rembusch which led up to the writing of the statement given out, and said that no differences whatever existed between Mr. Rembusch and himself. He also informed me that he had many good friends in the A. E. A., who will be glad to work with him on any condition.

Mr. Schaefer’s attitude toward the A. E. A. is distinctly friendly. That was very plain to me, judging from the conversation. As I was leaving he said that in order to bring about the amalgamation of the two organizations he was willing and ready to make any concessions possible, so long as they were fair to his friends in the League.

Mr. Schaefer told me before leaving that a meeting of the executive committee of the M. P. E. L. of A. will be held Labor Day, Monday, September 2, to take whatever action is necessary to bring about harmony between the two organizations. The proceedings of the meeting will be read before the convention of the A. E. A., the time to be fixed by the executive committee of the latter organization.

Lucien C. Wheeler Talks of His Duties

Interesting News About the Work of Mr. Hoagland and Himself for the Division of Films.

IN the latest issue (July 18) at hand of the Bioscope, London, considerable space has been devoted to an interview with Lucien C. Wheeler, representative in the city of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information. The Bioscope article states that in France alone 30,000 feet of negative are now being taken every week by the United States nationals and are being sent weekly to Washington, where they are developed and positive prints made and assembled for distribution.

It was also announced, at the time the article was written, that America’s Answer to the Hun,” the story of the Paris showing of which already has been printed in the World, would be presented in London in the near future, under the auspices of the British Ministry of Information, in accordance with an arrangement made by Mr. Wheeler with the British Ministry’s Cinematograph Department.

“So far,” says Mr. Wheeler in the article, “we (meaning Herbert Hoagland and myself) have been highly pleased with the result of our work in London. By the officials of the Ministry of Information, and particularly by Sir William Jury and his assistants, we have been received with the utmost cordiality. Every suggestion we have put forward has been met with the fullest and most generous response and Sir William Jury’s department is co-operating with us in the most enthusiastic, whole-hearted and effective manner.”

Friedman in Charge of Foursequare

Celebrated Players Film Corporation Will Release Not Less Than Twelve Feature During Coming Year.

JOSEPH L. FRIEDMAN, president of Celebrated Players’ Film Corporation, informs me that the interests of Foursequare Pictures, Inc., will be in charge of his organization, dating from August 15.

George Backer, president of Foursesquare Pictures, Inc., and also of the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, visited the city last week, and during his stay made arrangements for turning over the Foursesquare office to the Celebrated Players’ Film Corporation. He also made arrangement with Mr, Friedman to handle the future productions of the Bacon-Burmeister and the Harry Rapf Films, Inc.

Under these arrangements the Celebrated Players' Film Corporation will release not less than twelve features of the super-feature type during the coming year.

Mr. Rapf, C. V. Schaefer, its personal representative, who has been in Chicago for several days looking after Poursquare interests, returned to New York August 16.

A Fish Story on George Kleine.

An amusing fish story has leaked out in which George Kleine was the principal victim. Mr. Kleine has been dri-\n ving these breezing days between work at his executive offices on East Adams street, and in fishing at Eagle Lake, Wis.

One morning he and his party left a certain landing by rowboat, arrived at a point about half a mile down the river, and started for another lake. The parties had planned to reach another lake which connects with Eagle by a narrow channel, choked for most of its length by grasses and sedge weed. Progress was slow and strenuous for the rowers, as the oar blades had only weeds and grass to furnish resistance to the strokes. When the party reached the channel, they were wrapped in masses of weeds, the party took an hour and a half in making the short trip, and morning had succeeded dawn.

Hastily the fishers got ready for the killing. The early morning's sport was intended to be a "live" baiting fest, for the finny tribe in those waters scorn decoys, however tempting.

Where is the bait? asked George, with just the tinge of fear in his customary bass voice, and the vestige of a pallor that could not be on his face.

Great heavens! It had been left behind on the landing, between which and them stretched the strangled channel. But not all the fair promise of a bountiful fish harvest could tempt the party to make the round trip twice the same day!

Ruling on Light for Lightless Nights.

The conservation department of the Fuel Administration for Illinois recently announced the following rules on the light to be used outside of each picture theatre at night, during the period of lightless nights which took effect July 15 to 30.

For safety reasons only each theatre is limited to 500 watts to light the lobby and the box office. No lights are permitted outside of the building for signs or advertising purposes, either in front of or on top of the building. When a theatre uses the front doors for exits, the lights over these exits must be included in the 500 watts allowed.

Political Candidates Must Favor Pictures.

The committee on political action, of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., will meet Tuesday and Thursday of every week until the primary election takes place. All candidates des-\n ired for district and state offices must appear before this committee and state their attitude toward moving pic-\ntures and the industry as a whole.

Joseph Hopp American's Chicago Representative.

Joseph Hopp has been selected to act as representative of the American Film Company releases in Chicago and trib-\n ute headquarters. He is the head of the Chicago office, fourth floor, Consumers Building. Mr. Hopp will be assisted by experienced salesman, who are now being selected for the work.

Mr. Hopp's long connection with the distributing business in Chicago eminently fits him for this position. He is one of the oldest ex-changes in the city, having founded the Standard Film Exchange in 1907. This exchange continued to keep Chicago business until October 6, 1915, when Mr. Hopp sold out to Universal.

"The Great Love" Packs Orchestra Hall.

D. W. Griffith's Artcraft picture, "The Great Love," broke all records for this season at Orchestra Hall, so manager Hill has informed me. Several times during the week, both in the afternoon and evening, waiting lines were to be seen, a very unusual happening at this house of over 2,500 seats.

The admission was 25 cents, the customary summer price. The attraction will be retained for another week, but it will not be extended long, probably. "The management, however, is restricted to one week, as a rule, by the releasing company.

George Kleine's Italian Film at Playhouse.

"Behind the Lines in Italy," the six-reel feature made by an Italian producing company, on the request of the Italian Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, exclusive American rights being purchased by George Kleine, will begin an indefinite engagement at The Playhouse, this city, Sunday, August 18.

Twentieth Century Changes Ownership.

The Twentieth Century Theatre, Forty-seventh Street and Prairie Avenue, which recently acquired by Henry Ortstein, owner of the Vista Theatre. The house has been renovated for the opening under the new management, which took place Saturday evening, August 17. A high class program was offered for the occasion.

Randolph Will Be Finished November I.

Adolph Linick, of Jones, Linick & Schafer, state that work on the Randolph Theatre, their new house on Randolph Street, near State, will begin September 1, and it is expected that the building will be finished about November 15th. The total cost is estimated at about $420. Architect Newhouse has the plans prepared and they have received the approval of the owners. Mr. Linick mentioned incidentally that the ventilating system will be the same as that installed in the Orpheum and Kiafco, the other two "Loop" houses owned by his company. Throughout the hottest summer a steady temperature of 68 degrees can always be found in these houses.

Prominent Film Concerns Change Headquarters.

Paramount will remove headquarters in this city from the nineteen floor of the Consumers' Building, on State Street, early in September, to its new building at Ninth Street and Wabash Avenue. The Select Pictures Corporation will move into the quar-\nters vacated by Paramount in the Consumers' Building, on the fifteenth floor, where its present quarters are located.

"The Master Crook" to be Released Soon.

The Celebrated Players' Film Corporation will release early in September "The Master Crook," featuring Edmond Breese and Alma Hanlon. President Friedman of the organization considers this production a very strong picture of the "Raffles" type.

"Around the Clock with a Rookie" Y. M. C. A. Subject Shown in Screen Magazine Has a Real Film Actor in Title Role.

A REAL film actor, picked up accidentally for the pur-\pose, is the star of "Around the Clock with a Rookie," a special release for Universal's Screen Magazine. This picture, directed by H. E. Hancock of the Y. M. C. A. War Service Council, and photographed by George Courtert, reveals the adventures of an American soldier in war and play from reveille to taps, and traces his development from a rookie with two left feet to the status of a crackjack fighting man. The picture was taken at Camp Devens, Mass, with incidental scenes from other sources touching on the war subject.

Mr. Hancock, when he went among the rookies looking for a "type" for his head character, was offered a regular "nothing but thumbs" and left feet of the awkward squad. He found a "type" that answered all requirements. Then it developed that the "star" was really a young fellow who previously had served time as a player in the Lubin studios.

But, though the rookie knew the technique of film playing, he did precious little acting in this film. The trouble was he didn't know how to handle a gun, and this spoiled all his chances of putting art into the action. But the results delighted the director. The picture portrays all the im-\nportant bumps and as well the good times that are cast in the lot of a soldier.

Considerable attention is paid in the film to the recrea-\tion division of a soldier's life. It shows how his leisure moments are filled with comforts and facilities to enjoy himself. "View of the Y. M. C. A. huts and the reading rooms, etc. are given. There are twenty-five huts at Camp Devens, and the provision of fun for soldiers constitutes a big undertaking done in a big way.

It should be stated, in fact, must necessarily be a matter of leading importance to the soldier. The soldier is free to enjoy himself from 4 p. m. to 10 p. m., and with the exception of the dinner hour, he passes much of the time in the Y. M. C. A.

One of the most interesting scenes of the "Around the Clock with a Rookie" is that taken in the Eagle Hut in Devil's Island. This is set in historic surroundings, and is one of the most important recreation institutions on the other side.
Educational Films Branching Out

Vice-President Hammans Tells What His Company is Doing in Coming Year—Three Subjects a Week

E. W. HAMMONS, vice president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, announces a notable expansion of activities for the season of 1918-19. The precepts of the Federal Government to conserve everything for war efficiency are being kept steadily in view. Indeed, all the work of the Educational will be of the useful kind.

"Within the year half a million feet of the Educational's films have been sold to agencies connected with the Government for exhibition in foreign countries or the entertainment of the Expeditionary Forces on the transports or in France," said Mr. Hammans. "This will serve as an indication of how closely we are working in harmony with the great American purpose overseas, while at the same time we are catering to amusement needs over here.

"In the current season of 1918-19, beginning September 1, 156 short subjects a year—that is, three a week—besides occasional multiple-reel features of great public interest such as 'Your Fighting Navy' and 'When the Elmendorf has turned over to us 50,000 feet of his original negatives forming a picturesque record of Oriental life and of the monuments of pre-war Europe. This has never before been available for motion picture houses, but is now being edited and titled with a view to popular requirements. A number of other individual travel, scenic and scientific novelities will be announced by us a little later.

Will Release Cartoon Comedies Weekly.

"The demand for the International black and white cartoon comedies has greatly increased since that concern chose the Educational as its agent about four months ago. New comedies will be released at the rate of one a week throughout the year. Besides the Happy Hooligans and the famous kids, Gregory La Cava is now taking Tad's Silk Hat Harry cartoons as the subject of a new series, and the first release thereof took place on August 19. Some have wondered why these cartoon burlesques have found a place among the Educational's more serious work, but the obvious answer is that the clientele of any good theatre requires a medium of farce and fun alongside the more solid elements of its program. Audiences like the meat and the gravy, but they want the spirit and the dessert.

"The problem of wider distribution," concluded Mr. Hammans, "which has exercised us considerable in the past, is now being happily solved, thanks to the organization of the Educational Distributing Corporation which has recently been established by outside capital with my friend Charles A. Dean as the active head. To the even dozen of Educational exchanges now doing a flourishing business have already been added three others founded by the new company in the important centres of Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit.

Educational Opening New Exchanges.

"Exhibitors of the Chicago district can be assured of the best service and the fullest cooperation from the Distributing Corporation's Chicago offices of R. C. Cropper, at 220 South State street. In Detroit, Harry Abbott is opening up the Michigan territory by a new branch office located at 63 East Elizabeth street. Picture managers of northern and central Ohio who have been long seeking Educa-Giant Wakes." In addition to these the Robert C. Bruce 'Scenes of Adventure in the Northwest' will be continued with an entirely new series descriptive of the Yosemite Valley and Lake Tahoe, the Mount Shasta Range, the Yellowstone Park, Jackson's Hole and Teton Mountains in Wyoming, and many hitherto unexplored locations in Oregon and Washington. The distribution of the fifty-three pictures made by Raymond L. Ditmars under the fascinating title of 'The Living Book of Nature' will be maintained and carried forward, much of it in virgin territory. These Bruce and Ditmars series have been no small factors in the policies that have won unexampled success for the Rothsfel and the Strand theatres, respectively, and they are rapidly being introduced into the high-class houses throughout the country.

"George D. Wright's 'Mexico Today,' twelve pictures now being released, descriptive of the land and the people, will be followed by a new series depicting the political and industrial life of Mexico. Mr. Wright is now working on this subject with every facility afforded to him both at Mexico City and in the Tampico oil fields by President Carranza's government. E. M. Newman's travel abroad in the Allied countries will supplement with a series of wartime films the able Newman Travels he has already furnished us, of life in the Far East and in the American possessions. "A distinct novelty of the 1918-19 season will be a series of tabloid native Indian dramas prepared by the Northwestern Film Corporation at Sheridan, Wyo. The company is using native Indian actors exclusively and promises the first truly realistic representation of aboriginal life among the scenes made famous in the history of America's western frontier. The primal release of the Dwight L. Elmendorf foreign pictures will be another interesting event of the season. Mr.

Hamish McLaunir with RED CROSS.

Hamish McLaunir, who has been publicity man for S. L. Rothsfel since the opening of the Rialto, has resigned to accept a position with the Red Cross publicity bureau at Washington. Mr. McLaunir's assistant, Louis Geffen, will succeed.

"Cigars for Kings and Millionaires"
No Scarcity of Operators in Toronto

THE number of operators in Toronto is not likely to be a scarcity in the moving picture projection machine operators in Ontario, as an announcement has been made by President Charles A. Dentelbeck of Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local 173 of Toronto that the local has just made the membership of the Toronto local now at the high water mark, about 100 operators being actively associated with the local. Incidentally some sixty members of the local are overseas with the army or have already done their part of the work. Nine members of the local are actually in France or England. The membership now will also includes sixteen returned soldiers, some of whom were not operators before their service with the army. The large push on the part of the local to meet the present great needs of the country as a new occupation and received instruction in vocational and re-educational institutions under the auspices of the Government. Just as soon as one of these returned men finishes his course and is able to qualify for an operator's license he joins the Toronto local. This remaking process for returned men has only just practically started. The Toronto local has assured the authorities that only returned soldiers will be employed anywhere as operators' assistants. Practically all the members of the local are married men with dependent, excepting those who have gone to war or have been rejected for physical reasons. Three members of the local have been officially reported killed in action and two others have been unofficially reported killed.

The Toronto local is said to be the first branch of the U. A. F. in that city to be formed for the express purpose of honoring of honorary memberships on members who don the uniform of the army. The soldiers are kept in good standing until they return to their work or take up other occupations after serving.

There are over two thousand local members in the Toronto local and the number of theatres in Toronto is approximately 85. There are now two operators in a great many Toronto theatres as a result of educational work on the part of the union. The Toronto local union has a number of out-of-town members.

Conditions in Toronto are apparently quite satisfactory and the operators are evidently making an honest effort to take care of the goods. The object of projection is seriously studied from all angles and many members are continually trying to work out new ideas of their own.

Uncle Sam to Appear as War Worker

At Thirty-five State Fairs in Twenty-three States He'll Show Film of His Own Making.

UNCLE SAM will show himself as a war worker to those of his nephew and nieces at some thirty-five state fairs in twenty-three states during the fair season which is just opening. The presentation will be made through motion pictures taken by the Government and developed by the armed forces. These pictures show military work in the activities of the army engineers constructing heavy pontoon and spar bridges, mining and demolishing enemy defenses; the types of horses and their training needed for cavalry and artillery; and the logging and milling of timbers for ship construction. Federal road building as another part of the development of transportation facilities is shown in various stages from foundations to the final crowning of the road.

A large part of the films will show the part played by the man behind the man behind the gun—the producer of food and clothes and shelter. Such films portray poultry and hog raising, the best practices in the National Forests for the production of wool, leather, and meat.

Six First Run Houses Open in Detroit

By September 1 All Will Be in Full Swing—McGee of Majestic for Open Booking.

By Labor Day every first-run theatre in Detroit will be open. Ground breaking of the Redstone yesterday announced that the definite opening date of that house is September 1, while M. W. McGee, managing director of the Majestic theatre, plans to open August 25. A Corcoran noticed yesterday that the logical course of the Majestic is to adopt a rather unique policy—that of absolute open booking. He will probably open with a Pathe feature with Frank Keenan, "More Trouble," running it two weeks, and following it with "To-day!" a state right feature owned for Michigan by Joe Horwitz, of the Four Squares Exchange.

It is Mr. McGee's contention that there will be plenty of good pictures to attract customers and that he will be able to compete with other good attractors so that, after all, the feature will not be more than thirty per cent of the consideration.

Mr. Miles is also of the belief that there will be available plenty of good pictures and that he will have the advantage of billing although he has already contracted for some fifteen or twenty Paramount pictures, and will likely open with a Paramount picture with Jack Barrymore.

There is now some talk that Messrs. Coheu and Warren, of the Colonial theatre, Woodward and Sibley Streets, are seriously contemplating changing the policy of that theatre, making it a first or second run theatre, running all pictures a full week. If they adopt this proposed policy it will increase Detroit's list of first-run theatres to six.

Reissues Are Liked in San Francisco

Several Downtown Houses Offering Them, the Only Complaint Being Against Change in Titles.

THE film reissues that are being handled by several exchanges in San Francisco are meeting with a splendid reception and are being offered on the bills of some of the largest downtown houses. Many of these, with their new titles, and in rearranged form, are superior to the original productions and are proving fully as satisfactory as the box office points. The only protest that the exhibitors are voicing is the change in name that has been made in some of these. In communities where the original picture was not shown this camouflage is of importance, but it seems ridiculous for the same reissue being shown the same production under two names. One of the leading local downtown houses that has been strongly featuring a series of Chaplin reissues gives the name of the old production, as well as the new title, in its newspaper advertising. For instance, "The Pugilist," is featured as adapted from "The Knockout."

Business during the past few months has been none too active, especially in the interior, where many theatres have been closed for the summer and others are operating on a greatly reduced schedule. The reissues that have been offered have given exhibitors an opportunity to secure service at rates, a percentage of receipts, that has been difficult to get them, and at the same time permit them to offer some of the finest productions of the past. Some are free to confess that their ability to secure reissues featuring prominent stars, at the reasonable rental prices that have been named, has alone enabled them to continue in business during the summer months.

JUNE ELVIDGE HANGS UP A RECORD.

June Elvidge, a World Picture star, is taking a well merited vacation and she has returned from Europe where she completed a five reel photoplay by Clara S. Beranger under the direction of Travers Vale. Miss Elvidge during the past year has completed fourteen subjects. In addition to these appearances she was employed by "Seven Open Orders," "Eve," and "City Scourge." Fifteen productions in twelve months is a record that no other moving picture star has ever reached in five reel pictures. In these same twelve months Miss Elvidge was never late one day at the studio. She never held up a scene or delayed the work by dilatory tactics.

DALLAS EXPRESS SERVICE UNSATISFACTORY.

Dallas film men with hardly an exception have forwarded to the Federal Express Company complaint blanks stating that service given by the merged express company is not satisfactory. The principal complaints are that the express company takes no pains in routing films by the most direct route and that many delays are occurring. They also complain that the wagons will take no late afternoon shipments. All the film exchanges are making their express shipments days in advance to insure delivery on time. This naturally is inconvenient.

WALTER COUGHLIN BOOSTING AMERICAN FILMS.

Walter A. Coughlin, western representative of the American Film Company, Inc., has established headquarters at Spokane in the offices of the Pacific Exchange and will boost American productions in that territory. Mr. Coughlin is well known to exhibitors of the Northwest, having been connected with the Mutual exchange for a number of years.
Spokane's Liberty to Increase Prices
Manager Cohn Taking His Public Into His Confidence Against Expectations of Federal Tax.

SPOKANE pictures can pull their belts up another notch and clench their fists with the new determination to do another bit—almost two bits, meaning 25 cents out here—toward winning the war. If the amendment to the tax act now goes through, admission prices in some of the picture theatres are due to go up, and will probably run from 40 cents for boxes to 24 cents for general admission. Manager W. B. Cohn of the Liberty Theatre has been tentatively adjusting his admission scale to fit the new tax demands, and will put the new scale into effect when the amendments become law. He is taking the public's confidence into his confidence to explain why increased prices must necessarily follow.

The present Liberty prices are: General admission, 18 cents, plus 2 cents war tax, or 20 cents; children, 9 cents, plus 1 cent war tax, or 10 cents; boxes, 31 cents, plus 4 cents war tax, or 35 cents.

Liberty prices when the new taxes become operative will be: General admission, 20 cents, plus 4 cents war tax, or 24 cents during the present, 8 cents, plus 2 cents war tax, or 10 cents; boxes, 32 cents, plus 8 cents war tax, or 40 cents.

Increased admission taxes are not the only way the moving picture houses are hit by the proposed amendments. To-day they pay a war tax of 15 cents a reel a day for all their pictures. Under the amendments they will pay instead of the real a day tax 5 per cent of the rental price of films. This magnifies the effect of increasing their film tax several hundred per cent.

In addition, theatres, like all corporations, are subject to the income tax and the excess profit tax, if there are any excess profits. There will also be an increase in the personal income tax, according to Manager Cohn, and the proposed new assessment will take about 33 1/3 per cent of their net profits.

On top of all is the annual government seating tax, based on capacity, which in the case of the Liberty Theatre amounts to $100 a year.

Liberty Now Paying Over $26,000 Annually.

"The Liberty is collecting and paying to the United States government between $20,000 and $30,000 annually," said Manager Cohn. "The government has held that the theatre is an essential business, and each theatre is a licensed government collector of taxes. The picture theatres have become an essential agency for propaganda, through their screens, Four-Minute Men and film trailers. We are informed that during the Fourth of July recess, 25,000 cents, or 10 cents, will be furnished every exchange with film trailers with famous stars, and these will be attached to all further productions. Patrons will be charged for seeing these films and not see or listen to some of the government's propaganda."

"Hereafter the government will deal directly with the picture theatres in placing its official war pictures. We have also been asked to submit bids on government pictures of various types."

"The picture theatres are not complaining and are doing all they can willingly in keeping up the morale of the people and giving the public all the encouragement they can. The increased cost under which we are forced to operate. The Liberty salary list is 100 per cent higher than it was a year ago. Carbon costs are up 500 per cent. Condensers are much higher. Film service costs us from 50 to 250 per cent more than a year ago. Printing, advertising and all supplies are soaring. If the new tax plan goes through 50 per cent of the small-town houses will be forced to close their doors within six months."

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS NOT WORRIED.

The prospect of a tax on theatre admissions just twice that now prevailing, with a tax as well on the admissions at houses charging less than 10 cents, is not viewed with any alarm by exhibitors in Cincinnati. On the other hand, very few believe it will effect attendance to any great extent. They point to the fact that the present 10 per cent tax has had virtually no effect on attendance, as far as they can tell, and that the most part of the opinion that the imposition of an additional tax of a cent or two to help Uncle Sam win the war will be accepted by the public cheerfully and willingly. It is admitted that the high-priced tax, if not moderated by the hit by the tax, will probably suffer still more, as a 20 per cent cut in attendances means something to something with them; but photoplay exhibitors, as a rule, feel that in their case there is little to worry about.

Exchangemen Aid Wounded Soldiers

THE exchange managers of the national capital are going ahead with their plans to assist the sick and wounded soldiers, now numbering 2,200, confined to the Walter Reed General Hospital. A sub-committee from the association consisting of Oscar A. Morgan, W. E. Kent and Clarence L. and Bertram F. Linz, made an initial visit to the institution to ascertain what the men want most among the list of things that are supplied to them by the Government or the American Red Cross.

The sub-committee had previously purchased a large quantity of cigarettes for the boys, as well as a thousand souvenir postal cards of Washington to be used by the invalids in keeping their parents informed of their condition.

"There is an excellent chance for exchange managers and exhibitors all over the country," declared Mr. Morgan, who is secretary of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, "to do good work along this line. There are forty-four Red Cross Convalescent Huts—one at each of the large camps and cantonments—where there are boys who would welcome a visit such as we made to Walter Reed. If the picture and the donation of a few smokes, picture postal cards of the city, games and puzzles. We are going to ask the exhibitors in these theatres, that are interested to assist us in keeping the Walter Reed Hospital invalids supplied with these little things."

"If there are parents or friends of any film boys confined to Walter Reed, or the various Huts throughout the country, they will all welcome a letter or a wire. With the word of sending a personal message to them," said Mr. Kent, "our committee will be only too glad to perform such a mission and see to it also that copies of the film trade journals are sent to these boys."

The committee is willing to undertake any reasonable personal service as outlined above, and interested persons in the film industry can communicate with the Washington office of the Moving Picture World, or to Mr. Morgan, at the Famous Players Exchange, or Mr. Kent, at the exchange of the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Operators' Jobs Have a Sudden Value
Building Commissioner in Cincinnati Reports Rush of Applicants for Licenses Following "Essential" Decision.

THE fact that draft ages will soon be greatly extended, probably in both directions, coupled with the announcement that certain operators are held to be engaged in an essential work, has resulted in a regular stampede in Cincinnati of would-be dealers in film operating booths. This, at least, is the report of Building Commissioner Rendigs, who supervises the issue of licenses.

The requirements for passing the examination will be strictly observed to the letter, he declares, stating that he will not permit men to pose as operators without due qualification merely in order to escape the draft or work in some useful occupation. Formerly two or three men a month applied for licenses, but since the war the number after the "work or fight" rule went into force, with exemption for operators, nine men took the examination in one day.

Shifts Among Kansas City Managers
Changes and Promotions, Coupled with Demand of War, Bring New Men Into the Field.

A GENERAL shift has taken place among the managers of the Kansas City branches of several film exchanges. I. F. Mautzke, of the Kansas City office of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed special representative for the Mutual and has left on a brief trip to Oklahoma City. Mr. Mautzke will make his headquarters in Kansas City for the present.

G. R. Sirwell, manager of the General Film Company, Inc., has resigned. H. R. Brennen, traveling auditor for General is in the city, and will take charge of the office.

Milton Feld, for the past eight months manager of the Universal Film Exchange office in Kansas City, has left to join a firm in the East. Mr. Feld is now a sergeant in the Quarter master's department at Camp McClellan, Texas. L. B. Douglas, assistant manager, takes Mr. Feld's place. Mr. Douglas was with Universal five years ago, then manager of the Kansas City office, and returned to Chicago for a year and a half, returning to Universal in Kansas City about a year and a half ago.
Good Pictures and Music for Soldiers

At Camps Near New York Men Will Hear the Soloists from Manager Edel's Strand.

THROUGH the patriotic co-operation of Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, it has been made possible to secure the Strand's soloists at the camp near New York when pictures are being played. The following have offered their services gratis: Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano; Rosamond Lind, dramatic soprano, formerly with the Grand Opera Company of Brussels; Alys Michot, coloratura soprano; Herbert Waterous, basso, formerly with the Metropolitan Opera Company; Cora Traces, soprano, Miss Mamie Zangey, violinist.

Contracts for "Hearts of the World" have been signed for camps Upton, Custer, Lee and Meade, and confirmation for the camps in the Southwest is expected to be received any day.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" has been meeting with success at all the Liberty theatres. Official orders were issued by General French at Camp Jackson to the Commission on Training Camp Activities to secure this picture for free showing to the men.

"Pershing's Crossroads" has been a hit in Camp Grant, Custer, Pike and Travis, and will be played on the entire Liberty theatre picture circuit.

Douglas Fairbanks in "Say, Young Fellow" opened Monday at Camp Upton's Buffalo theatre as a picture feature on the vaudeville bill. In "Hill Hart in Shark Monroe" will play the last half of the week.

General to Issue "Our Bridge of Ships"

Government Two-Reeler Shows How Workmen Are Peopling Shipyards with Enthusiastic Hosts.

JUST when another Liberty Loan is coming along, here is "Our Bridge of Ships," a two-reel subject that should sell "dollars' worth of Uncle Sam's securities to those who have taken shares in the early issue and to those who have held off through suspicion (or some other motive) created by doubts as to how the billions are being spent. The "peopling of the Shipyards" is a very big and tremendous activities that are being rushed to a victorious climax under the direction of Charles M. Schwab, director general, Emergency Fleet Corporation, and Richard N. Hill, president of the Shipbuilding Board.

The two reels shown August 19, in the Kinoton projection room, Masonic Temple Building, give brief and convincing "shots" at activities in a score of shipbuilding plants. With construction work in various stages of advancement, steel and wooden shipbuilding is pictured and there are no end of impressive "shots" at great crowds of enthusiastic workmen employed in squelching the atrocious Hun.

In a half-minute silence to read "Our Bridge of Ships" through its various agencies, and exhibitors - who wish to arouse local enthusiasm, stir patriotic action and make a connection in showing the proper spirit that the "man behind the man behind the gun" will see to it that this newest Government film is flashed upon their screens.

Crandle Advises Legislators on Tax

Washington Exhibitor Says Care Should be Taken Not to So Weaken Industry as to Make It Non-Operative.

THAT the many taxes proposed for the motion picture and other theatres in the bill being whipped into shape by the Senate of Congress is a question up to the day. The houses especially was pointed out by Harry M. Crandle, of Washington, to a number of Congressmen during a visit to the Capitol. He showed the legislators that it will be impossible for them to present figures changes for admission, and predicted that the fifteen-cent houses will be asking twenty-five cents (tax included) if saddled with the heavy burden proposed.

Now people are called upon to pay a tax of two cents upon each fifteen-cent admission. If this tax is doubled it will mean the gross admission charge will mount to nineteen cents. In Washington, while conditions are different that in New York City, the admission prices are jumped up to $35 weekly, and other costs have mounted in proportion, and with a doubling of the seating capacity tax and the imposition of a rental-price tax, added to the others, the result will be that operating costs will reach several more cents. In fact, it is figured that the fifteen-cent admission will, in round figures, total twenty-three and a half cents—and the exhibitor will charge twenty-five cents.

Mr. Crandle was careful to point out that the exhibitors of the United States were not asking to be exempted from taxation—they are willing to do their share—but he urged that care be taken not to so weaken the industry as to practically make it non-productive. Heavily burdened it can yield little or no revenue, he declared.

Film Offerings at New York Theatres

Programs for the Week of August 18 at Some of the More Important Locations of the Picture Houses.

STRAND.—Ethel Barrymore in a screen version of her stage success, "Our Mrs. McChesney," was the star of the picture program at the Strand the week of August 18. The Broadway stories of the last few years have many popular features. The latest official War Review, a Christie comedy entitled "Know Your Neighbor," another number of the Outing-Chester bird pictures and the Strand Topical Review completed the screen bill. Grace Hoffman and Mery Zentay were the soloists.

RIALTO.—"Her Only Way," a Select picture with Norma Talmadge featured, was at the head of the Rialto list. George Scarborough is the author, and Sidney Franklin directed the production. The Animated Magazine, a comedy and a scenic were also shown. The soloists were Greek Evans and Mlle. Madeline D'Espino.

EDISON.—"Elsie Ferguson in a Heart of the Wilds," an Artcraft picture, was the leading player on the Rivoli program. Josephine Garavelli was the soloist. A comedy, a scenic, the Animated Pictorial and the Official Allied War Review were also issued.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, Gloria Joy in "The Locked Heart." Latter half, Mabel Normand in "Back to the Woods!"

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Griﬃth's "Hearts of the World" continues to fill the theatre.

GEORGE M. COHAN'S.—"America's Answer."

ALLEN HAS HONOR ROLL OF 34 NAMES.

Eighty-one employees of six theatres of Calgary, Alberta, have enlisted with the Canadian and Provincial Allied War Service overseas against the Hun. This total is an indication of the great number of moving picture theatre employees of Canada who have joined the colors for the big fight during the four years that the Dominion has been at war. The Calgary branch of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Limited, has also seven representatives in the Army, and this fact is evidence of the manner in which exchange employees have taken up arms.

According to the statistics recently compiled in Calgary the Allen Theatre heads the list with thirty-four names on its honor roll. The Pantages Theatre has seventeen employees in its service and although all of the employes of the Princess Theatre have joined the fight. The Regent Theatre, Calgary, has furnished six soldiers, while the Empress and Bijou Theatres each have five men in uniform.

McMAHAN TO BUILD THEATRE IN NEWTOWN.

Definite information that the Cincinnati Development Company, in which J. W. McMahan, of McMahan & Jackson, is largely interested, is planning to build a good-sized moving-picture house at Newtown, near the site of the vast Government nitrates plant now under construction, has been made available. As there will be fully 10,000 persons employed in the plant when it is finished and under way, and an army of families will nearly all live nearby, it can be seen that there will be ample business for one or several theatres. The same company will also operate other business enterprises in Newtown, as well as handling the development of the land for railroad purposes. The corporation which led Mr. McMahan to jump promptly into the real estate business when the site of the Government was settled bids fair to net him a substantial fortune, judging by the increasing activity of the real market in the section referred to.

HULSEY BREAKS HIPPODROME HOODOO.

E. H. Hulsey, who owns more moving picture shows than any other man in the Southwest, which has stayed with the Dallas Hippodrome for years. Manager after has failed at the theatre. Hulsey took it over early in August, and through judicious advertising and the showing of high-grade pictures, succeeded in packing the house. On the opening day when Griffith's "The Greater Love" was featured the lobby of the Hippodrome was a bower of roses sent by Dallas merchants who are anxious for Hulsey's success.
Enlarged Music Department for World
George W. Beynon, Its Editor, Realizes His Ambition to Give Service to the Music Director.

For some months George W. Beynon, who conducts the department of the Moving Picture World headed "Music for the Picture," has been working upon a new plan for the presentation of that industry interest, and essential subject. Always a leader in the matter of real service to the exhibitor the Moving Picture World years ago started a music department, a time when very little attention was given to that factor of exhibiting. Much of the progress that has been made in the way of associating music and the picture has been through the advice and guidance thus provided to musicians who were playing the pictures.

In its several steps along the road of progress in this particular branch of picture presentation it is probable that the most fruitful effort was in securing the services of Mr. Beynon as editor of the music department. Being a musician himself, Beynon has been able to understand the need of accomplished and widely recognized such as musical directors throughout this country, Mr. Beynon at once brought to his department a number of the best musicians in the country. We hope our readers will like it; he offers the most comprehensive presentation of the subject that has yet been offered.

Whitman Will Campaign with Films
New York Governor and State Secretary Appoint Harry Levey to Supervise Screen Exploitation.

The political campaign in New York State will be waged to a great extent through the films. A step was made in this direction by the appointment of Harry Levey, director of the Universal's industrial department, to have charge of the film campaign for Governor Whitman and Secretary of State Francis Hugo.

Mr. Hugo instructed Mr. Levey to produce a special picture to be entitled "My Four Years in Albany," which will review all the important activities of both the Secretary of State and the Governor during the tenure of office. The film is likely to be one of the chief campaign enterprises of the Republican forces.

It will be remembered that Mr. Hugo has previously figured as an active sponsor of the motion picture message carrier. He had a big part in carrying out the Educational Division of the feature, "Careless America," by the Universal, in advance of the Safety First campaign.

Prepare New Scenario Writing Courses
Extension Division of University of California Finds Much Interest in Work Among Students.

The course in scenario writing that was featured last term by the extension division of the University of California, under the direction of Earle Snell, proved so popular that new courses in the subject were prepared for the summer and fall terms and classes are now receiving instruction. The new courses are designed to fill the need of those who have expressed a desire to enroll, and many who are already on the waiting list. The elementary techniques of scenario construction are being taught along the same lines as the major work was covered by the previous courses and in addition there is an advanced class for those who have mastered preliminary technique; it will include building of a complete new picture employing a number of the latest methods of direction of approach. Exhibitors express the opinion that the need of the industry is for more good stories from authors trained in the technique of the screen. The offices of the extension division of the university are located at 62 Post street, San Francisco.

Migratory Star a Diminishing Light
Louise Huff Says It Is Shortsighted Policy on the Part of Player Continually to Change Employers.

"The motion picture star who shifts from one company to another after every picture or two and not alone injures herself, but causes suffering from a monetary point of view to the exhibitor," says Louise Huff, who has just completed the second picture, "The Sea Wall," for World Pictures.

"It is a sighted policy for anyone who has had the good fortune of having her name elevated to stellar position," says Miss Huff, "to move from one company to another. It is true that for the moment she may be able to earn a little more money than she would if she loses her drawing power because she confuses the exhibitor who, being unable to keep up with her migrations, confines himself to exploiting her in the stereotyped way. She must maintain her the brightest lights of concentrated publicity. She also must have the advantage of discrimination in selection of stories. She must also be in sympathy and accord with the director and cameraman. It is not until she gets this cooperation that she bears and if it is not maintained she will lose her star." Huff, it is maintained by those in the industry, is a type of star that may be said to be the most efficient and the most valuable to the industry.

Gerald Film Doing Remarkable Business
In Its Twenty-Week in Boston and Over 100,000 Persons Have Seen It in Cincinnati.

With more than two hundred persons waiting in line at 10 o'clock at night for the last show to start, the small town of Medina, Ohio, established a remarkable record when it showed to 1,759 persons out of a total population of only 2,000 a few days ago. The attraction was "My Four Years in Germany," and Manager Branch of the Princess Theatre utilized several good publicity ideas of his own in addition to material furnished by the First National.

At the Tremont Theatre in Boston Gerald's "My Four Years in Germany" is in its twentieth week and still showing to capacity. The Boston Advertiser recently declared that this picture has established itself as one of the greatest successes ever shown on the screen. Naval officials have been special guests of the theatre management and have also asserted that this picture has been a tremendous aid to recruiting through the medium of the picture screen.

Shewing to more than 100,000 persons in 168 performances broke the established new turnstile figures during a phenomenal four weeks' run at the Grand Opera House in Cincinnati. The manager of the feature, J. W. Franklin, publicity man for the Grand, stated that "My Four Years in Germany" was undoubtedly the most talked about picture ever shown in Cincinnati. It played to a gross of $21,401.75. A special performance was given by the Universal. The Migratory Star was utilized in co-operating with the local naval recruiting officers.

Restoring One Year of Business Life.

The World reporter who interviewed Jacob Wilk on the subject of Hiller & Wilk for a recent issue took a whole year of business life away from that firm without so much as an apology. Hiller & Wilk, as a matter of fact, started business August 1, 1915, instead of two years ago as stated in The World's interview.
British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

The reply of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the petition recently presented by the Exhibitors' Association for a reduction of the entertainment tax in its application to lower-priced admissions has been made with a promptness not usually associated with Governmental transaction. The aim of the petition was to secure administrative readjustments of the import to allow an increase in price of seats without incurring the increased tax range, thus making the additions to the seating without which is impossible. For a twopenny seat the patron pays two-pence-halfpenny, the halfpenny being tax. Should the showman find it necessary, as many have been compelled to, to increase the price of his cheapest seats to two-pence-halfpenny he burdens his patrons with just double the former amount of tax. Exhibitors, particularly in poorer districts where the cheap seats furnish the staple receipts were not long to realize the impracticality and through the Association's efforts the welcome announcement was made last week of readjustments in the working of the tax. These are: Upon seats not exceeding 2½d, tax ½d; exceeding 2½d, but not exceeding 4d, tax 1½d; exceeding 4d, but not exceeding 7½d, tax 2d. There is no material sacrifice in tax revenue in any or all of the alterations, but they meet the purpose intended by permitting the exhibitor making a slight increase in his charges without encountering the next grade on the tax scale. The readjustments are scheduled to be operative October 1, but it is highly probable that they will be available in August.

Shirley Kellogg, revue star of the Hippodrome and wife of Albert de Courville, is contemplating an early excursion into what one scion of the "legitimate" calls the great contemporary.

"Les Miserables" (Fox, new version), has recently been shown to the trade and viewers at the Alhambra. The booking barometer, so the Fox people tell me, has set immoderately at "fair."* * *

Herbert Brenon, who has been over here several months, has very nearly completed his work on the Government film he has been engaging and will be a work upon another. It is palpably a propagandist picture, but the scenario by Hall Caine and the artists destroy it will allow the producer scope for play upon the emotions in a manner hitherto unassociated with patriotic application.

The London branch of the Exhibitors' Association has a bone to pick with Film Booking Offices, Ltd., the distributor of the picture at the Royal Albert Hall upon the occasion of a patriotic demonstration there. The Gerad film has been booked extensively in the Metropolis as a serial.

As evidence of the general interest being taken in the Tideal company's moving picture biography of the Prime Minister, Lloyd George, the introduction of the matter into Parliamentary discussion is a thing of noteworthy interest. It arose from a question in the House of Commons asking if it was an official film. It is not. It is entirely the private enterprise of the Ideal Film Company, assisted by Lloyd George's brother, William Lloyd George, and by Sir Sidney Low of London University (Imperial and Colonial History), who has prepared the script.

Moving-picture biographies seem to be the general rule with which the city this fall has had to do. We have had already seven pictured "lives." And now Maurice Elvey has practically completed a "Life of Nelson" for International Exclusives, Ltd.* * *

The Provincial Kinematograph Exhibitors' Federation, a northern organization of exhibitors, condemns in unmistakable terms the growing practice of the smaller independent exchanges in releasing feature films expressly so the convenience of a leading cinema in the locality. It frequently happens, they aver, that a subject exhibited exclusively at a city cinema in this manner does not fulfill its second engagement for a fortnight or three weeks later during which time it may have been shown at several halls outside the city area.

A County Court ruling at Sheffield against the Fox Company makes it quite clear that when an exhibitor alters a contract form for film hire, although not confirmed by the exchange man, receipt and return constitute an acceptance of its terms and legal responsibility to execute them.* * *

Lady Stapleton, wife of Sir Miles Stapleton, has become a professional moving picture player. She is a well-known society beauty and is embarking upon a cinematic career as a form of war work.

Now that the merging alignment of interests has been consummated in the London producing combine, National Kinema Productions, Ltd., it is possible to definitely corroborate previous assumptions on the policy and aims of the undertaking. The capital of the company is approximately half a million dollars. The president is J. Benson, an owner of extensive theatrical properties, and the managing director Will Barker, a moving picture producer of twenty years' standing. The two companies, if they continue to produce independently of each other but which will release under the one banner, are the British Actors Film Company, and that first milestone in the history of our Ideal, Barker Production, Ltd. The N. K. P. will more or less be devoted to the preparation of super pictures, multi-reel dramas, both of the spectacular and social type or both. The personnel of the two companies already working with them will remain unaltered. Thomas Bentley, our Dickensian specialist, will still direct for the British Actors Company and Will Barker, now that he has resigned from some of his trade organization offices, will still find time to supervise affairs at the "old shop" in Soho Square.

Sir Thomas Beecham, a pioneer of grand opera, with a picked company of artists now touring, visited London under his own baton, deplores the appeal of the lighter setting for skilled musicians. "Most of our best singers have gone into lighter opera and, I suppose, we shall presently see them in the cinema houses where our orchestras have already gone. For lack of other scope the most brilliant players ever heard in the world are now playing in cinemas," he says.

A few weeks ago exhibitors at Sheffield threatened to refuse to show any film that had previously been shown in the city, as any films are played at the regular moving picture theatre. The position was precipitated by the appearance of "The Garden of Allah" (Selig) at a local public hall. To eliminate any possible misunderstanding the exhibitors of Sheffield, 85 per cent of the members of the Exhibitors' Association, are anxious to state that this resolve is one in principle and execution to apply to any film so exploited to their detriment and bore no special application to the production above mentioned.

Film Booking Offices, Ltd., reports heavy bookings of Ambassador Gerard's visualized narrative, "My Four Years in Germany," and the release date is months away yet. This, the first moving picture of a state document, had a notable send-off, sponsored by many celebrities in divers walks of life. More ambassadors, foreign ministers and dignitaries of the state, church, law and industry attended the New Haven premiere of "A Kinema at the Abbey" than would be found at the highest society functions.

Glasgow exhibitors are justifiably annoyed at the admission of the general public—that is, to be specific, individual members of the general public—to the private trade and press viewings of forthcoming features. Not that the complaint is peculiar or confined to the Scottish capital; in Vamping Is Now a Pursuit and a Verb

While Precedence Seems to Go to the Vamp the Lady Is Not Particularly Well Defined.

Among the current ladies of Filmdom, especially those most in vogue, precedence seems to go to the Vamp. She is not particularly-well defined. She is some sort of a mysterious compound of Louise Glau, Dorothy Dalton and Theda Bara, with a dash of Gay Parree. Her mission in life is to bleed young bloods in dress suits when they are genially alcoholed.

Vamping has become a pursuit and a verb. I vamp. Thou vampest. SHE vamps.

"She" is often represented to be "French," and she is about as "French" as American accent on "Give me some bread."

"Donny moo doo pang!"

It is a safe bet that the Vamp gets more "mash notes" than either the Ingenue or the Poor-Working-Girl, though this may not speak well for the future of our noble race, at least so it would appear at a glance. But let us not judge the sex skirmish superficially.

The ladies of Filmdom may not be representative. These impersouations are becoming to lose flavor. They are served up from the delicatessen menu. What is called fresh from the American gardens and orchards would be far more palatable, but puzzled producers of pure and uncommercialized purpose do not seem to know where to find it, so embittered is their love of the drama by hatred of paying a royalty.

They have much to learn from detested sources.

The American girl who dances on a table strewn with flowers and champagne glasses at 3 A. M. is a weird creation of Atlantic City idealism. She is more likely sound asleep after a chocolate-ice-cream-soda at the corner drug store, but chuck full of dramatic possibilities. Beneath her embroidered "nightie" are more ardent emotions, delicate sensibilities, capacity for making trouble and extricating herself skillfully from it than in all the vamps, ingenues and working-girls put together, with a beautiful-stenographer-headed-for-ruin thrown in.

The American girl has dazed all Europe and some husbands.

As light as froth in skimming over the surface of things in peaceful days, she has swiftly adapted herself to complex conditions in war times to the amazement of all, herself included. It is not easy to name her strongest characteristic. Let us say she is "congenially emotionalized." Her impulses for good and bad are staggering in results, according to the way she happens to feel at the time. She makes our hair stand on end, or turn gray, or strokes it with gentle hand in such swift succession that we never know exactly what to expect. We are in a panic of joy or fear whenever she mixes in.

As complex as love, the embodiment of life, when may we see this Lady Contemporary on the screen?
Hodkinson Program Promises Variety Corporation Believes with Latest Additions of Contributing Companies It Can Supply Any Type of Production.

With the addition of the Lillian Walker Productions to its program the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation believes it can supply any type of star and picture, thereby offering the exhibitor several series of pictures possessing individuality. Lillian Walker brings the Hodkinson Service a series of "happy" pictures, the first of which, "The Embarrassment of Riches," by Louis K. Ans-pacher, is a comedy drama of New York life.

J. Warren Kerrigan, so far the only made star on the Hodkinson program, will be presented by Jesse D. Hampton in a series of romances and adventure, such as his current release, "Burglar for a Night," which has been well received by both critics and public. "Prisoners of the Pines," the Kerrigan-Hampton release for September, is a story of the White-Carson-Fields adapted from Kenneth B. Clarke’s story, "The Swamper."

Louise Glaum, believing war time unpropitious for tragedy, has wrapped her calculating tempests up in their scarlet gowns and put them away. Her future Paralta-Hodkinson plays will be strong dramas providing her with sympathetic roles, such as "A Law Unto Herself," a story of France and Miss Glaum is Miss Glaum's best effort.

Because of her versatility, Bessie Barriscale adds spice and piquancy to her appearance in being one moment a comédienne and the next an emotional actress. However, her future Paralta plays are going to be as far as possible, "The White Lie" is such a picture, telling the story of a woman who lied to bring happiness to her husband and then lost his love because of her deed.

The brand new Plaza pictures present Anita King in outdoor stories of love and adventure. Miss King is a girl who does things and, as a suffragette in "Petticoats and Politics," her first Plaza-Hodkinson release, she keeps not only herselt, but a whole town in action.

Kenneth Cliford, petite and sprightly, gives a child delineation in "Angel Child" that is as novel as it is refreshing. Miss Cliford is also a Plaza star.

Color pictures fill out the Hodkinson Service program with scenic pictures in Nature's own colors. "Cupid Angling," which has already enjoyed hearty ovations given it on the Pacific Coast, where it was given pre-release showings, combines story and scenery. Ruth Roland is the star.

The schedule of prices instituted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for its product is believed to be a new one, based, as it is, on the tested and proved box office value of each star in each and every section of the country instead of on census population.

It is the belief of Mr. Hodkinson that this way of scheduling the price of stars is the only fair and equitable one not for only the exhibitor, but the producer as well.

Fleckles Gets Back into the Game
Well-Known Exchanger with A. Weinberg Forms Screen-craft Pictures and Leases Thanhouser Plant.

The Screencraft Pictures Incorporated, which has been quietly forming for the past few months with several of the best known men of the industry at the helm, is now unmanned as a full fledged and active concern. Executive offices have been established in the Longacre Building. A deal has been consummated whereby the company takes over on a long lease the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle for the production of their pictures. The direction has been engaged and the story selected for the first production.

The officers of the company are Marcie Fleckles, president, and A. Weinberg, secretary and treasurer. These men are well known in the industry, having been associated with it for many years.

Mr. Fleckles through his wide exchange connections and mutual acquaintances has a knowledge of the film business that dates back to the early days of the industry. He has had extensive dealings with the independent exchange owners throughout the country, who have placed their confidence in him in many large deals in the past. With Mr. Weinberg’s association with the Famous Players the Screen-craft Pictures, Incorporated, is offered by men who enjoy a wide knowledge of the film business and are thoroughly familiar with exchange work and the market.

Realizing the failure of the majority of the new companies that enter the field has been due to not possessing the manufacturing of film spent several months visiting the various important exchange centers, will the result that his company is going forward with a definite plan to make pictures which they know in advance will find a ready mar-et among both exchanges and theatres. Screencraft has already arranged for an independent branch.

The story for the first production has been selected. It is of the clean society type scenario with sprinklings of comedy situations which are so desirable to-day. The company has not decided on any certain length for its pictures, but will make them in natural length.

Frank Reicher, whose many successes are well known in the picture field, has been selected to direct Screencraft productions. Mr. Reicher during his connection with the Lasky Corporation staged more than thirty of that company’s pictures. Well known principals will be employed in the pictures and negotiations are going forward at this time with players and their abilities, drawing power and popularity are unquestioned.

Work on the first production will start immediately.

Quickly Breaks Into Officer’s School
Luther Reed, Metro Scenarioist, Is Yanked Out of Yaphank Within Twenty-Hour Periods.

LUTHER A. REED, until recently a member of Metro's scenario staff, has broken all records among draft men for reaching an officer's training camp. Like the citizen who arrived at Camp Dix one evening and handed himself on a transport bound for France the next morning, without even getting a peek at Dix in day time, Reed, within twenty-four hours after his induction into Upton, at Yaphank, Long Island, was headed for Camp Lee, Va., one of the latest officers' training camps established by Uncle Sam.

And three weeks before he was drafted he hung up something of a record in a studio for scenario work. He wrote and adapted "A Pair of Cupids" for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne with his right hand and with his left made the screen version of Edna Ferber's "Emma McChesney" stories from George V. Hobart's stage adaptation of them for Ethel Barrymore. Between this work and his preparations for his journey to Boston, he dashed off "Thirty Days," which will be May Allison's next starring vehicle for Metro, and "The Grizette" for William Fox.

Prior to his entrance into pictures, Luther Reed was successively reporter, ship news editor, and dramatic critic of the New York Herald. He enjoys the distinction of being the only reporter that ever interrogated himself into the affection of the different Sir James M. Barrie to the extent of Sir James breaking an engagement with the late Charles Frohman to keep a lunch date with Reed.

Reed is a graduate of Columbia University. He was prepared for engineering, but his abilities along these lines were shelved after a year in newspaper work, which he "took to" as he has just taken to his new calling. Never丢了 him knowledge of mathematics, particularly the mill system, which is an essential of most army work, will stand him in good stead. He is the only son of Dr. and Mrs. William A. Reed of New York City.

"Salome" Slated For a Thousand Houses
Through the K. and E. and Shubert Circuits Bookings Are Being Made Over Twenty Routes.

With contracts coming in daily the Fox Film Corporation announces that more than 1,000 first-class dramatic theatres throughout the country have already sent in contracts for showings of "Salome," the great Theda Bara production of the life and love of the daughter of Herodias.

Bookings are being made over twenty routes through the K. and E. and Shubert theatrical circuits, and high class theatres in every large city and town in the country have either already booked this attraction or expect to get it soon. Several well-known theatrical agents are out in advance of the twenty road shows which William Fox has sent out on this play, and reports are being received daily at the Fox home office of more bookings on one dollar top price scale.

"Salome" opened at the Orpheum Theatre, Seattle, to capacity, according to a telegram received by the company from the manager of the theatre. The theatre seats 2,000.

"Salome" will open in the near future in Portland, Ore., September 7; Detroit, September 7; Providence, September 9; Lincoln, Neb., September 9; Los Angeles, September 9; New Orleans, September 15; Albany, September 23, Kansas City, September 22; St. Louis, at the William Fox Liberty Theatre, September 29; Omaha, September 30, and San Francisco, September 30.

Unhonored and Unsung Is Film Editor That Is, Usually, but Such Is Not the Situation with Lee Dougherty at World Pictures.

In the navy the under officer is often thrown deep down in the bowels of the ship keeps the steam at the proper gauge. He has the least chance of any to save his life when a torpedo finds a vital spot. So in the motion picture industry the one man who is chiefly responsible for the success or failure of a picture is the film editor. All that a director knows plus that of the scenario writer and continuity creator must be within the knowledge of the man who cuts, rearranges, re-edits and assembles the bits of material photographic source so that it will fit, each in its place to make a story that the audience will appreciate and approve.

World Pictures is fortunate to have such a man in Lee Dougherty, who began his career as a walking Hurtwitz, and will tell you that there is no set rule to out turn successes, that each picture must be treated from an entirely different standpoint. It is not generally known that he frequently go over and over a picture sometimes as many as fifty times before arriving at the right proportion of length for the scenes and just how they should be patched together.

Not alone must he have a knowledge of method and editing, but he is compelled to have a good working knowledge of the laboratory end and of just how the development must be made, when the negative should be over and under toned, from how it should be treated to get best light effects. If the story was honestly told of many of the great hits instead of directors and stars getting the credit the film editor would be entitled to all the praise and glory.

Vitagraph to Issue Blackton Production Announced

THE production which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is making under the auspices and with the cooperation of the British-Canadian Reading Mission, "The Common Cause," is to be released through the Vitagraph distribution organization. The date of release has not been decided upon, although the production is about half completed.

In an authorized statement to the exhibitors of the country relative to his distribution plans Commodore Blackton says: "I have looked over the entire field of motion picture distributors for the company best equipped to give 'The Common Cause' the distribution which its aim and theme demands.

Mr. Blackton declares that "The Common Cause" will be the greatest effort of his career. It certainly has everything in its favor. To begin with, the story is the joint work of two famous writers—J. Hartley Manners, Major Ian Hay Beith and Percival Knight. Mr. Manners is the author of "Peg O' My Heart," "Out There" and other plays which have won renown on Broadway. Major Beith wrote "The Game of Life," starring Douglas Fairbanks, and "Our Mutual Friend," one of the greatest books called forth by the war, while Percival Knight, the third member of the trio, is a well known actor and playwright.

The scenario was written by Anthony P. Kelly, and in the production of the play Commodore Blackton has unlimited financial means and every facility, including the use of troops, guns, fighting tanks, etc., for making a great picture.

The title role is to be carried by the distinguished star of the silent screen, Douglas Fairbanks, who is followed by Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer. Others will be Lawrence Grossmith, Louis Dean, Mlle. Marcel, Hanlon Gordon, Philip Van Lorn, and Charles and Violet Blackton, the son and daughter of Commodore Blackton.

THE PROJECTION AT THE STRAND PROJECTIONS, KINGSWAY, AUGUST 11

The afternoon height of the day is always a busy one, and, to make sure of keeping the public satisfied, the Strand projection room is well supplied with the latest films and the most up-to-date projection equipment. The Strand projection room is an ideal one, and the Strand projectionist is fully aware of the importance of keeping the public's interest alive by providing them with the latest films and the most up-to-date projection equipment.

Dentelbeck is an Operator and More
President of Local 173 and Chief of Toronto's Strand Is Keen for Refining Accessories.

T HE projection at the Strand Theatre, Toronto, shows signs of improvement all the time due to the personal interest taken in projection room matters by Charles Dentelbeck, chief operator, who also happens to be president of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local 173, Toronto.

Dentelbeck has worked out a buzzer attachment to warn the man in charge that a reel is becoming exhausted. This device consists of a roller which functions within the film on the upper reels. This roller drops down as the reel becomes unwound until a contact arm touches the opposite pole of a dry battery circuit, causing the sounding of a buzzer. The alarm continues until it is switched off by the operator who then has two minutes in which to prepare for the switch to the other machine. When the buzzer is disconnected from one projection machine the switch becomes aligned with the connection for the other projection machine.

Another innovation consists of shaded incandescent lamp bulbs inside the "carbon compartments" of the machine to throw direct light on the side of the reels. If the bulbs are being changed or when any special adjustments are being made.

At the Strand the operator does not have to rely upon his memory to keep the picture full brilliance because the chief usher on the orchestra floor has a push button which operates a buzzer in the projection room to warn the operator of a possible misframe or dark spot. This warning signal was installed at the request of Mr. Dentelbeck himself.

Operator Dentelbeck has also reduced the size of apertures through which the pictures are shone and is yet another innovation. These windows. One glance is sufficient to show how much vagrant light is caught by the reduced apertures. All electric lights in the projection room are fitted with special devices to throw all rays from the apertures and windows. Incidentally, these windows are fitted with glass panels.

An exhaust fan was recently installed in the ceiling of the Strand projection room and during the recent hot spell the theatre parties had to be suspended for a short time.

Dentelbeck has a work bench that would honor a toolmaker. Along the back of the bench is a long row of machinists' and electrician's tools and practically all repairs or attachments can be made on the spot.

Still another Dentelbeck innovation is a string and pulley attachment which facilitates switching from one machine to the other. When the switch is shut off to one machine, this cord opens the door between the arc and the film on the other machine and vice versa. This cord crosses one machine to the other at a height several feet above the head of the operator.

Gladish.

Unfailing "Crack Canada's Blue Laws"
That's What Allen Theatre Interested When They Showed Laura La Plante's "Recent Solar"

THE Allen theatre interests of Toronto broke the Blue Laws of Canada respecting the observance of the Sabbath twice during the present month for the sake of entertaining returned soldiers who are now convalescing in military hospitals.

"Hearts of the World" was presented at the Davisville Hospital on Sunday, August 4, before several hundred ex-warriors, the majority of whom have lost either a leg or an arm. Great excitement prevailed as the story progressed and the soldiers had one of the most enjoyable afternoons of their hospital life.

On the following Sunday, the 11th, a party journeyed from Toronto to Whitby by automobile to present "Hearts of the World" to the many soldiers who are in the Whitby Convalescent Hospital. The picture was presented with full concert and distribution, the Military Picture Theatre making the trip for the occasion. The big feature was shown in the up-to-date picture theatre which has been provided by the Canadian Government for the amusement of the soldiers in this hospital.

HOT WEATHER DOESN'T STOP SWAAB.
Lewis M. Swaab, 1327 Vine Street, Philadelphia, Pa., who is the exclusive distributor for Simplex machines in Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, is one of the most progressive supply men in the industry.

The importance of printed matter as a vital means to the growth of his business has been evident from the time Mr. Swaab entered the accessory field. He not only uses mediums of national circulation, although he sells within a limited territory, but he reaches his public through house organs, large quantities of envelope inserts and advertising in local publications.

Neither does he relax in the so-called dull spell of summer. He believes in keeping exhibitors informed of the fact that he is selling machines during all seasons.

New Quick Changing Sign on the Market
Southern Concern Offers Novel Idea in Electric Signs for Theatre Fronts.

ELECTRIC signs for theatre fronts have been lacking in the chief essential of ease in changing, but A. Greenwood, of Greenwood Advertising Co., of Knoxville, Tenn., has been in town the past few weeks with a sign that can be completely changed in a few minutes.

Two Views of the Quick Changing Sign.

This sign was mistakenly credited to one of the purchasers of a sign by a trade publication recently, but the sign is already in limited use in Tennessee and promises to gain a wider field because of its handy construction. As will be seen from the cut, the sign consists of a two-bank space for lettering and an oval for a portrait or trademark. The insert shows a sign at night, while the body of the cut shows it in daylight use. The letters are set into panels which may be detached for changing, or the letters may be changed without removal. A font of 250 letters come with the sign. These are cut from heavy gauge galvanized metal and are provided with wire pins top and bottom. These pins fit into holes drilled in the panels, being inserted into the upper holes first, when the lower pins can be dropped into their proper spaces and rest against a ledge which preserves the alignment. The ovals are made of similar sheet metal soldered onto wire gauze. The backing is a shallow box painted in white enamel and illuminated by concealed lights in the rim of the sign. 130 ten-watt lights giving an illumination equal to electric lights. A flasher may be cut into the circuit or two or more systems of colored lights installed. The only glass in the entire sign is the light bulbs, and when dusty the sign may be washed down with a hose without danger of breaking. One of the signs is to be installed by S. L. Rothapfel on the marquee of the Rialto, if a license can be procured, and Mr. Greenwood's visit to New York will probably result in their installation elsewhere.

Spends $2,000 for Five-Foot Dissolve
Worsley of Paralta Shows Cement Base, the Emplacement of Huge Dummy Gun and Then Its Discharge.

WALLACE, WORSLEY, who directed "A Law Unto Herself," the latest Louise Glauin Paralta play, is authority for the statement that he has filmed in this picture the costliest dissolve yet made in film history. The making of the five feet of film, which flash by in five seconds on the screen, cost approximately two thousand dollars. It may be the highest-priced, five-foot strip of film on the market.

This cost was necessitated by the fact that a huge cannon, an exact reproduction of the 42-centimeter which was so popular with the Hun at the beginning of the war, was called for in this dissolve. It had to be taken from the studio to a location in a vineyard in the town of Sierra Madre. Here a cement foundation had been prepared for it. The dissolve shows one of the characters of the story gazing at the foundation before the gun is upon it, and before him appears the vision of the gun which is to be placed there in years.

The camera was set first to take the empty foundation, and then it was left rigidly in place, with the cameraman standing guard over it to see that no one moved it, for two hours and a half while the huge gun was being hoisted into position and mounted on the emplacement. Then came the other part of the dissolve showing the monster cannon being fired.

A Helpful Assistant for the Operator
General Electric's New Compensarc for Current Regulation of Mazda Projection Lamps is Compact and Efficient.

TO give the close regulation of current essential for Mazda motion picture projection lamps the General Electric Company has developed a new Compensarc which will be known as the Type I. Form B. Protection is afforded against over current and regulation to within one-tenth ampere is obtained. It operates on the reactance principle and is furnished for standard A. C. voltages and frequencies in ratings of 20 and 30 amperes, corresponding to the Mazda lamps now on the market for this purpose.

Owing to its compactness, it may be installed convenient to the operator, who can watch the ammeter and control the current by the hand wheel shown in the illustration.

This Compensarc is made up of a two-coil auto transformer stacked with standard transformer punchings within a raw hide housing, the complete wiring of which forms the line side with the lamp terminals tapped across one coil. The coils are stacked so that room is left between them for an iron leakage plug in each side of the magnetic circuit. Turning a hand wheel on the shaft of the iron plug moves it in and out between the two coils giving a very close adjustment for the lamp. Maximum reactance is obtained when the plug is all the way in. The only noise is a slight humming when the plugs are being withdrawn; this ceases when they come to rest.

The net weight of the Compensarc is 32 pounds, and its dimensions are 8 3/16 inches wide by 11 7/16 inches high by 10 3/4 inches deep.

Further information regarding the compensarc may be obtained by addressing the General Electrical Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and mentioning the fact that you saw the description of the apparatus in the Moving Picture World.

"BUSTER" KEATON ON HIS WAY.

"Buster" Keaton, one of the brightest lights in the Paramount-Arbuckle comedies, once a member of the vaudeville family of Keatons, is now wearing khaki, and what is more is on his way with Company C, 159th Infantry of Uncle Sam's forces.

On the eve of Keaton's departure for camp a dinner in his honor was given at Seal Beach, which included a minstrel show, with Arbuckle as interlocutor, Lou Anger, Al St. John, Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline as end men. Before the affair closed a wallet was presented to the department come- dians which, on opening, contained $100, the gift of the company to defray his camp expenses.

Buster Keaton was a great favorite with all who knew him, as well as a most capable performer, and his presence will be missed by his former comrades of the Paramount-Arbuckle force.

Facts and Comments

If reason prevail there will be no effort made at the Chicago convention of the American Exhibitors’ Association to instruct Congress on the subject of taxation, as has been suggested, but on the contrary resolutions should be adopted pledging the utmost support of the exhibitors present to whatever plan the wisdom of our lawmakers devises, and thereafter to do all within their power to meet the requirements of all laws enacted for the successful prosecution of the war for the preservation of human rights. At this time there can be no other course for loyal Americans. We can imagine a pro-German pacifist association rearing up on its individual hind legs and voicing a mighty protest against everything that the Government at Washington might do that touched its members adversely, but we cannot imagine an association of motion picture theatre owners doing anything of the sort. Incidentally there are no pro-German pacifist organizations in this country that one can notice, and the exhibitors who meet in Chicago in September are not preparing to qualify as such.

Exhibitors should not get the idea that there is any discrimination against them in the matter of taxation for war purposes. The Congressional committee charged with the task of raising something like thirty billions of dollars, estimated as needed to pay our war bill for the coming year, faces no small task. They are human beings and may make mistakes, but they are not making mistakes for the fun of it. Every precaution has been taken to prevent mistakes that will work hardship upon any class or trade. It was for that purpose that a committee of representative motion picture men went to Washington and had a talk with the members of the Ways and Means Committee on the subject. From the information elicited the committee has reached certain conclusions which seem likely to become component parts of the War Revenue bill when it is finally reported. There is no evidence that the members of the committee acted without careful consideration of the information placed at their disposal by the delegation of motion picture men who appeared before them. There is no evidence that they were influenced by press agents’ yarns or by an antipathy to the motion picture business. To intimate such is the case is mere twaddle and unworthy a second thought. It is not within belief that a gathering of motion picture exhibitors will take any such view of the situation.

We deny that the war tax has had detrimental effect upon the motion picture business. The records do not show that picture theatres have closed or producing companies have ceased operations because of the war tax. Nor do we believe that the increase will work any hardship upon the industry, either individually or collectively. It is a credit to the motion picture industry that it is not numbered among the profit-seekers; it is to its credit that it has aided the Government whenever and wherever its assistance was asked. Through its close touch with the people it is in position to be of still greater service to this Nation in its greatest need. In the face of this record, who among us is going to have the temerity to quibble over the few paltry pennies which we are asked to give toward winning the war? Last week the Moving Picture World printed a list of about 800 names of men who have left good positions in the trade to go into the war. Some of them will give their lives for the cause of humanity. Our money is needed to back them up. Shall we give it? What do you think?
most suited for the purpose intended. An attractive feature of the new department is the manner in which it is put together. It will be noticed that all advertising in any way associated with music is assembled in the department. We believe that this innovation will appeal to the advertisers of instruments and compositions as the best place in which to place their product before musicians.

REGARDING the list of motion picture men who have signed up for the war, just mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, we desire to emphasize the fact that it contains probably one-tenth of the total number. We want the rest of them, and would thank all our readers to send us the names of those not already mentioned. Look the list over and then get busy. There are a lot of theatre men who could not be reached, but the list is not closed, so get them in for the next installment. It will be a matter of record.

Sardou and the Screen
By Edward Weitzel.

Sardou has not fared well at the hands of the adapters for the screen. The qualities that were the French dramatist's greatest asset have been almost wholly deleted from his plays; and the newer generation, that is not familiar with his works in the original, are wondering how he won his past reputation. In spite of the sneers of that clever stage novelist and fountain-head of smart small talk, George Bernard Shaw, the man who wrote the Porte St. Martin dramas for Sarah Bernhardt knew his business and could put more thrills, not dependent upon physical action, into a play than any other man of his time.

And it is the thrill that is the supreme achievement of the theatre, whether the appeal be emotional or intellectual. The subjective has no place in the scheme of the dramatist.

"Fedora" is the latest of the Sardou plays to be photo-novelized. In "La Tosca" the physical action of the last act—the execution of Mario and the death of Tosca—kept the dramatic tension at the right pitch. The scene of the killing of Scarpia, which is played almost entirely between two people, was not sustained and brought up to its proper climactic force. "Fedora," which contains but little physical action in the original, but possesses a wonderfully built up mental conflict, has proved a greater stumbling block for the present method of screen adaptation. The pictured interpretation is on the same level as are the efforts of a mechanical piano-player. All the points are brought in, but there is no skilful arrangement of incident, no mountain peaks of dramatic strength, to thrill the beholder.

When screen fiction first came into being an attempt was made to transfer stage dramas to the screen without changing their construction. The result was anything but satisfactory. A new method of drama construction was required for the new medium of art expression. Then came the screen novel that carefully—sometimes, painfully—explained each incident of the plot, and had only occasional flashes of the suspense that is the soul of real drama.

Suspense Means But One Thing.
And suspense means but one thing—keeping ahead of the spectator's ability to anticipate the action.

In the stage play of "Fedora" the sordid and commonplace situation of the illicit relations between Fedora's intended husband and the wife of Lorin Fpanoff is explained in a few, brief words; and almost the entire action is devoted to the consequences of Fedora's vow to bring to justice the one who killed the man she loved. The picture version gives one-third of its length, at the opening, to relating the details of the intrigue, and the artistic balance is completely destroyed.

Novelizing the Stage Play.
The photo-novel has its rightful place on the screen. But why take dramas that depend entirely upon mental action for their thrill and turn them into screen novels that are only weak imitations of the spoken plays?

The demand for the thrill that should accompany all true drama will eventually force the writers for the screen to evolve a technic that will develop a form of pictured story worthy to be called a photoplay. When this very important advancement in the art of the motion picture is an assured fact the screen will be much nearer its highest form of expression; and physical action, now its most useful and impressive factor, will be relegated to the production of melodramatic themes.

The motion picture will come into a loftier sphere of artistic endeavor when it formulates its own process of climax and suspense, and gives birth to a drama that is as skilfully articulated as are the plots of "Othello" and "Macbeth."

Game, Square and White
By E. T. Keyser.

In THE last issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD we published the names of eight hundred and fifty moving picture men who had thrown their business to the winds at the call of Uncle Sam. The list was far from complete, but such information as we acquired was literally dragged out by the heels.

The general attitude of the picture trade was that it was all in the day's work and nothing out of the ordinary to do what they could to make as good a showing in men as they had in contributions of time, money and publicity to the public cause.

When the moving picture industry raised millions for the three Liberty Loans and over a million in the New York district alone for the Red Cross nobody, outside of the contributors, had anything but a vague idea as to the amount contributed, and when it became evident that some rapid and graphic medium was needed to reach out to each nook and corner of the country with Liberty Loan and W. S. S. appeals the producers and exhibitors joined forces and put over a campaign of popular publicity such as the world had never before seen.

And what the picture industry has refrained from doing is almost as much to its credit as is its already long list of patriotic accomplishments.

The shoes that formerly cost three and four dollars now sell for five, six and seven; when the Government increased the internal revenue on tobacco the five-cent
August 31, 1918

Cigar went to six and seven, the fifteen-cent cigarette to twenty, and the tobacco which had retailed at ten cents for two ounces sold at fifteen for one and a half ounces.

Automobiles went up with a jump; clothes shed their wool and climbed in price and restaurants halved the portion and doubled the price. Railroad fares went from two to three cents a mile and letter postage has gone from two to three cents, and the poorer and the more unreliable the humble safety match the more one pays for it.

Taxes, shortage of labor, increased cost of material have all been used as profiteering excuses, and what an opportunity the picture trade had to boost the prices with equal reason only the picture men know.

But, despite taxes on raw stock, mushed negatives, incomes and profits, also the tax on each admission costing over five cents, the exhibitor is paying about the same for his attractions as he did in pre-war days, while the audience gets past the box office at the same old rate plus exactly the admission tax on his seat.

And, of all the industries which are furnishing the Government with supplies and material, the motion picture manufacturers are the only ones who are billing their goods at about net cost of production.

While the picture industry is enthusiastically waving the flag, it is not doing it to make an opportunity to insert the disengaged hand into some one's pocket.

Posing
By Robert C. McElravy.

EXTREME naturalness upon the screen is a difficult thing to acquire, and the work of a performer who does accomplish it stands out with great distinction. The layman, who vainly tries to sit for a photograph at intervals of five or ten years, appreciates the difficulty of the continued posing of the moving picture actor. Reflecting over his own attempts to look pleasant without playing the genial idiot he is able to forgive the lapses of the screen performer when they occur.

Complete mastery of self before the camera is tremendously difficult. There is always the tendency to strain for effect, to look at the camera, to make false gestures, to move about awkwardly, to appear ill at ease. To be sure, the performer has a keen and discriminating director to help him over the difficult places, but after all the director cannot give him poise and assurance, for these things come from within—and they are the qualities by which the extent of his gift as a performer will be measured.

It is probable that supreme naturalness before the camera is found only among animals. They are so apparently devoid of all borrowed emotions, they never strut or pretend or smile vacuously into the camera. A cow upon the screen is just a plain cow, as kindly and comical as you please. A dog is a dog, a kitten is a kitten, a rat is a rat. If an animal exhibits fear, it is real fear, not the "fireman-save-my-child" variety that some of our melodramatic friends give us. Nor are animals subject to the delusions that occasionally beset the human actor. If the monkey suddenly finds the spotlight turned his way he does not immediately get the idea that he is a lion; the inborn humility that all good monkeys have makes him content to continue in his own role.

But the comparison is after all unfair, for as a matter of fact nothing is expected of an animal except to be itself. The human performer has no such happy lot, however great his natural humility or sense of his own limitations. He is never permitted to be merely himself; it is his business to completely submerge his own being and project his consciousness upon the screen in the role of another! An actor named George Jones might find it a simple thing to appear as George Jones upon the screen; but when he is expected to be Julius Caesar today and Mr. Micawber a couple of weeks later and perhaps Peter Ibbetson the next time, his difficulties loom up distinctly. The marvel of the acting profession is that so many performers are able to carry to us the illusion of these manifold personalities, presenting them in many instances with astonishing naturalness and ease.

Posing, when effectively done, is a sublime art. It is by no means the artificial trick that many people assume it to be. Even where an actor appears frequently in his own proper person, without the aid of makeup, the demands upon his skill are great, perhaps even greater than when he has the advantage of outside aids.

Take Francis X. Bushman for instance. There is perhaps not a screen performer in the field who is more frequently accused of mere posing in the invidious sense of the word. The assertion would have us believe that the people who have enjoyed Mr. Bushman's portrayals of gentlemen of leisure and similar types all these years have been deceived. They would give us to understand that Mr. Bushman cannot really act and that he merely walks through his parts.

Well, Mr. Bushman does walk through his parts, but he does it with a singular command of whatever role he is playing. He appeared not long since in a little story called "Social Quickands." In this he played the role of a young man on a vacation, who falls in love with a girl in the usual way. But Mr. Bushman did not act in the usual way. His portrayal of the fashionable young vacationist was exactly what one would wish it to be. He did a lot of posing, but it was not conscious posing: although he used no makeup or other aids, he carried the idea of being quite lost in the character he was playing. In this, as in other offerings, he carried to success methods that might well have failed in less skillful hands.

However much we may dislike the word, it is not posing which displeases, but the sort of posing which does not quite come up to the mark.

DAVISON THANKS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.
That the American Red Cross fully appreciated the splendid aid which has been rendered to it by the motion picture industry is shown in a letter which has just been received by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from Henry P. Davison, Chief of the War Council of the American Red Cross.

"I wish to thank you for this additional proof of your sympathy with and faith in the Red Cross," writes Mr. Davison. "A tremendous responsibility has been placed upon us, and to us it is of the utmost importance that you aid us in making a proper accounting to the people of America, who have given to the Red Cross without stint."

KENT DANIELLS GETS LIEUTENANCY.
KentDaniells, a well known poster artist, formerly employed by the World Film Corporation, who enlisted in the camouflage division of the Engineers and now doing duty "Somewhere in France," has been promised to a lieutenancy. The camouflage division has been separated from the engineers and is now a distinct unit with the American Expeditionary Forces.

Mr. Daniells was made a sergeant a few weeks after he volunteered and his present promotion comes six months after his arrival in France.

Dangers of Expertise:

George A. Bleich, of the Empress, Grand and Queen theaters, Owensboro, Ky., sends in some samples of advertising and asks:

"Take a giant at the cross page ad sent you under separate cover and tell me if you think this sort of layout is bad one. The "ad" sharp in another of the journals pans this method "sampilin' fierce." He said it was even repulsive—repeative—mind you. Honest, now, I want to know and am quite willing to be taught the right way to do these things, but I can't take the same space, say 25 inches, and make it look as well, to my eyes, in three lines as it does in seven fours. It is absolutely necessary that I advertise my entire week's list of shows in the two Sunday papers because of the fact that these Sunday editions cover the entire county and the dailies do not, and I derive quite a large patronage from the ruralites. Again, the Sunday papers are read by the families in town largely and I know it to be a fact that the amusement page is turned to—not just found accidentally. This accounts for my giving nearly equal prominence to each day's show throughout the week. But look at the Sunday layout of June 2 and compare it with the others arranged cross page. Do you think it as attractive? Consider also that I make up the pages of two editions of our Sunday papers. The readers and cuts are supplied and used gratis, I might add. No one crowds or overshadows my space with other amusement advertising. And, by the way—dear me, you know many other towns of the size of this with two papers granting a full page each week for news of the pictures?

The rigid application of a few elementary rules is unwise. It may be a basic rule that a full week should not be advertised at once, but there are exceptions to the rule. Just as there are exceptions to the other rules, such as an advertisement containing too much copy. We take it that the function of advertising is to get results. If it gets all the business available, then it is good advertising, no matter what the rules may say. We have several times reproduced Mr. Bleich's advertising as a model for others, and this advertising, as shown in the first example, has been used for so long that it is practically a trade mark.

As an example of this, take a page showing the familiar form and another giving more of the effect of the reprinted advertisements. We think that the result will speak for itself to practical managers. For getting the entire message the cross-page cut is more orderly and more effective. It is not a good plan, we think, to use a general page as a general thing. It is better to hold to the next attraction, but there are innumerable instances where it is good policy to do so, and practical experience outweights the book-taught specialist. It is the same specialist, by the way, who declares this to be "easily one of the most artistic advertisement..."

A So-Called "Artistic" Advertisement that is Devoid of Pull.

An Odd Condition.

The Photogram, the house organ of the Star theater, Bellingham, Wash., calls attention to an odd condition of affairs in a note by Mr. Arnold in an old program just to hand. He writes:

Several persons have asked, "Why are so many Hart pictures being shown at one time?" Perhaps you have wondered too. Would you like to know the inside story? All right! There are two Hart exchanges in Seattle, each of whom have a set of the same two-reel Hart pictures. One set was gotten out with new titles, evidently to fool the people into believing that they were new Hart pictures. The other set was gotten out under their original titles to allow the Hart fans who wished, to see again the films that made him popular. We booked the latter set. An opposition manager, who had the other set of Hart pictures booked, came to me Friday, the 22d, and said, "Neither of us can make any money on these Hart pictures if we play them on the same days, or too often. You play one a month and I will play one a month." We advised him that our contract called for a Hart picture every Sunday and Monday and that we would be compelled to show them in that order. After saying that it would be unprofitable for us to play them on the same day, or too often, do you think this opposition manager played a Hart picture the very next Sunday and Monday, and every day during the following week to make money or do you think it would all do you think?

Mr. Arnold is using the original titles, for that is the sort of a man he is, but the opposition seems to work on the renamed reissue. In the same issue the program announcement merely states, "This is one of Hart's short features." The release question is just a muddle, but use of both a new and an old title in the same town is going to raise trouble somewhere.

T IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give complete and accurate information, the time it will be necessary to ask for four or even six weeks, if the desired information cannot be obtained at once.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in next booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by returning 20 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or less for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From Atchison, Kansas.

John W. Creemer, formerly of Chillicothe, Mo., writes from above city, and says:

Was in charge of projection room Empire theater, Chillicothe, Mo., when last I wrote. Had two Simplexes. Later set up two new 6-f’is at the Majestic, same city. Was there six months.

And now many Simplexes and projectors on a large scale. Have a 70 ampere, 70 volt Northwestern motor generator (mean the Martin, don’t you?—Ed.) which certainly is a dandy. Ammeter on each, and the Amps as read on the apparatus. Had location, but I get around that by placing a condenser lens in a frame and locate it in front of the ammeter. It acts as a magnifying glass, and I can read friend ammeter from working position easily. The Motorographs sound like thrashing machines when running with film in. Noise seems to come from lower loop. It is the same whether running with a small or large loop. Have you any idea as to cause of the noise. Intermittent sprocket teeth are worn quite a bit. I noticed a projectionist was bothered by noise in his Power’s motor driver. Think he will find it is caused by lack of lubrication between end of tension set screw and end of shaft carrying metal disc. As to rephrasing the question, I think the noise would be better. So many have studied the old questions and have saved the answers that they would not be benefited. Use 50 ampere D. C., 300 C. C. condensers, half size projection lens, and a special shutter blade which, in my case at least, gives practically no flicker at 60 feet per minute. How do you tell how many degrees wide a blade is? The last hand that assembled all means let us have them. They will be a step forward, and I hope the Simplex will be first to take it. How about it, Mr. Peet? In the Handbook you tell us to use clean photographic plates in the lens ports. Have tried them thoroughly, and have yet to find one which does not distort the picture even if it is but slightly. Use clean negative plates given me by a photographer. What was that handwheel under Brother Coddington’s Simplex? Notico projectionists in this part of the country are not punching good “Ad” films through my machines for a month without getting a bit of oil on them. When I receive film with a great many punch holes I usually cut out the strip are in. If there are but few I paste a 3/16-inch sticker over each hole. The stickers serve as a change of color and is objectionable as the hole. In June 29 issue you ask for our views as to "The projection room and its requirements." For one projector I would suggest not less than 6 feet square, and 7-feet ceiling. For two projectors, 9 feet square, and 8-foot ceiling, with 3 feet additional width for each added projector, stereo, or spotlamp. The official dedication of the room should be, as you say, "Projection Room." Only those things necessary to the work should be allowed in the projection room. Shelves should be constructed of galvanized iron, with covering of sheet asbestos. Work bench should under no conditions be allowed inside the room, but should be conveniently adjacent thereto. Standard of ventilation should be about 2½-feet, with slightly higher fan, and with fresh air intake at or near floor line. Minimum size of observation ports should be 12 inches square. Only brick, hollow tile, or concrete construction should be allowed, and standard should be 4 to 6 inches of concrete, with covering of linoleum to prevent dust. Fire shutter and fuse link system should be same as described in third edition of Handbook. A long letter, but one which it is very difficult to trim down, badly as we need it. My answer must be brief. Your condenser magnifier for the ammeter is unique, though should think you could only see well when directly in front of ammeter. As to the noisy projector, I cannot advise. The Motograph manufacturers do not keep this department advised as do other projector manufacturers concerning their projector. If your intermittent sprocket teeth are notched or rounded, you may make some sort of grinding noise in pulling out of the sprocket holes, particularly if you have a too heavy gate tension. If another set of questions were formulated they would be necessary by much more difficult than the last, hence only advanced projectionists could do anything at all with them. A circle is divided, circumference being 360 degrees. Naturally if there were three blades and three light openings all of equal width then each blade and each opening would occupy 1/9 of the circle, hence it would be 360 divided by 6 equals 60 degrees. No. Simplexes are built in two models. This particular projector has no lens ports on the front, but they have been covered with clean photographic plates, and has yet to see one in which either he or the theater man, including the projectionist, could do any distortion. There would be a minimum displacement if the glass set at an angle with the lens, but distortion—no, at least not sufficient to be discernable to the human eye. Have't the Coddington picture here, hence cannot answer. Think what you mean is the base he has provided for arc controllers. There is absolutely no excuse for oil on films. Oil on film means rank carelessness, sloppiness, and laziness. Glad to see it. The idea of using air for projection is good. If very carefully placed in corner of frame the stickers might not be too objectionable for change over sign provided there be not much movement. As to the "Stutter" effect, you are correct, real projectionist is. In my opinion 6 ft. screens should be the minimum. In this dodge of projectionists to the fewest of projectors, the minimum, I am afraid that most of the companies of projectionists in this country and Canada less than half a dozen have had enough enterprise or sufficient interest in their profession to discuss as you have. They discuss this thing, and now it is pretty nearly too late for discussion (July 22), as I must begin the preparation of the paper dealing with the projection room almost at once.

Likes the Westinghouse.

An Ohio reader of this department reads the editor for not stopping to pay him a visit while on the last trip West, and continues as follows:

Read the "World" from cover to cover each week, and when something in one of your columns looks like it is going to hit the Westinghouse motor generator set, I have one, and they certainly are worth their weight in gold. On the 11th day of November, 1915, I started it running, and it is still running nine hours a day, six days a week. Have had no trouble with it at all. My motto is: If it is working all right, let it alone. All the repairs I made on it were new brushes. This is NOT a glad-hand for the Westinghouse, but just plain truth. I have a fine equipment, as follows: Two Power’s 6-f, motor driven, and Westinghouse as above. Get good picture in projection room, would remark that the Power’s projector is 4 feet 7 inches long over all when setting level. In my opinion 6 ft. screens should be the minimum. In this dodge of projectionists to the fewest of projectors, the minimum, I am afraid that most of the companies of projectionists in this country and Canada less than half a dozen have had enough enterprise or sufficient interest in their profession to discuss as you have. They discuss this thing, and now it is pretty nearly too late for discussion (July 22), as I must begin the preparation of the paper dealing with the projection room almost at once.

Offered to stop in such towns as might write requesting it. Did not hear from yours. Now whatta y’ gotta say, huh? The Westinghouse you have is not the kind I examined at Pittsburgh and am waiting to examine again when it is finally ready for the market. If you are good, one will surely be a peach. Why didn’t you tell us how you have that resistance arranged?

New Catalogue of Supplies.

Eberhardt Schaeuler, New York City, orders a Handbook and says:

Have never had the opportunity of reading your Handbook, but intend to take time now. Am, as you know, an old time projectionist myself. Had to make my own machines and films at that time in order set and fill engagements, as none could be bought. And now my license card has run out, and I'm out of a job (Mr. Schneider is a manufacturer of Simplexes, and says, so his "out of a job" is by way of adoration of a jest.—Ed.). I read the projection department with interest every week. Am often astonished at the questions therein before you. Often had my pen all wet with ink to comment on some of them, but I am interrupted so much that writing is extremely difficult. I will just mention a few of the catalogues specialties which I have invented, make, and am attaching one for your examination.

Mr. Schneider has done much work in the special man-made of spot, which he calls "Sharpening," the catalogue contains 33 pages, and is profusely illustrated. His an-static device should interest cameramen, and certainly his "singleiluminating condenser" is one of the best improvements he makes and sells the Miroir Vitae condensing lenses, both plano convex and M-bi-C. We would, of course, heartily welcome any comment Friend Schneider might care to make on matters optical.

Condenser System and Its Complications.

In a paper read before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers by C.

Francis Jenkins, Washington, D. C., some contained in printed transactions of last meeting of that body, are statements with which we are accustomed. "Sharpening," the S-m system, appears to be very therefore, on those rays of light which meet most nearly in a point at or near the shutter position, and in the exact axis of the projection system; or, the size of the image used to blur the image on the screen, adding to the Illumination."

"Without any further explanation as to what Mr. Jenkins deems the shutter position," the statement, as above, is decidedly ambiguous.

But, for Mr. Jenkins' information, projectionists can supply the information that at the shutter position (correct shutter position, I mean) the surface of the front condenser is in focus and the effective ray has the area of the condenser image, which same varies widely under different conditions of projection. As a matter of fact if Mr.

Jenkins' statement were not true, it gives the size required for sharpening upon those rays at the center of the system. The axis of the projection system is true, the writer is now in position to add small figures for which that is not true may be proven conclusively. In the writer has proven it by covering all but a small portion of the outer surface of the opaque image, whereas the writer is not likely to be a quite sharp picture remaining on the screen, though its brilliancy will be much diminished. This holds good with ordinary lenses, but not with condensers of importance. In other words, we have found that, with grade lenses throughout, the entire surface of the light ray at aerial image of condenser gives sharp function, but that those rays outside the actual aerial image in an illuminated, but detract from the sharpness of the screen image.

This has been set forth several times in this department, and is the be the big reason for reproducing a whole, Jenkins the lens port to actual size of effective light ray, or, better still, to reduce to actual size of aerial image of condenser at, or as nearly as possible, its position.

Mr. Jenkins suggests that "the light ray, for which one has only the position of the light source considerably to one side of the axis of projection, while still keeping the aperture fully illuminated, a position far different from the normal one can be obtained."

The second position, to observe that a light source of large area will not, even with the best lens, put as sharp a motion picture on the screen as possible.

But, when the light source to one side has to do with the matter.

A special fact is that such a system is not from condenser to screen in order to get excellence in screen results. This is because If the crater be out of line with the aperture and projections lens, the film imperfectly magnified, and the projection beam is not in correct position, thus imposing a heavy strain on that part of the optical system, and one which is not intended to and will not stand. In other words the light source is not in the plane of center, anything outside the projection axis is caused by strain imposed on the projection lens.

It is possible that Mr. Jenkins really had this in mind when he wrote.

If so then his wording needs revision to be understood with any degree of certainty by the average man. As to his second proposition, it is a well known fact that nothing could equal a point source of light in accordance with that there is a considerable strain on the lens system to perform, or at least the work is so slight that no strain is imposed on the optical system at any point.

In the January "Moving Picture World" paper Mr. Jenkins supplies a sketch of a condenser system having a small bi-convex lens set in a larger reflecting cone. This he says gives surprising results in light conservation.

This is a modification of my own development of the A-Joy discarded Boylitt concentrator, with which I have seen a marvelously beautiful 12-foot picture projected on a plain, cloth screen with 12 amplification. The Boylitt concentrated and the light was exactly right, but the least movement threw the whole thing out and ruined the screen result. In other words, while it was a stem-winding wonder in the conservation of light, it was too delicate to be practical. I believe the same thing would apply with the Jenkins scheme, which is not nearly so efficient in light conservation as was the Boylitt condenser.

Mr. Jenkins speaks at length of the heavy loss through use of thick lenses which absorb a tremendous percentage of the light. He says that by the use of a two-inch lens two inches square, in a two-inch diameter condenser would be quite ample. With this we are unable to agree. The crater projectors rays in every forward direction, and the condenser system absorbs remarkably. The different condensers vary greatly, though some, at any point of the area of a 4.5-inch condenser lens. This means that with an 2-inch lens we would only have a two-inch projection picture, and a striking decrease in the effective light and this loss would far more than counterbalance the difference in absorption by the thick and thin lens, assuming each to be of the same quality of glass. This may be somewhat modified by the fact that an arc of given amperage could probably be located more eloquently to a thin

2-inch than in a thick 4.5-inch one. Just what the actual amount of such reduction in condenser diameter would be can only be said with certainty, but in my opinion there would be enough less light to preclude the projection of a modern theatre picture with the small lens.

Mr. Jenkins lays stress upon the importance of light on the circuits, but says not one word about the serious loss between aperture and lens, which would lead one to suppose that the projector optical system have not covered that important item.

Mr. Jenkins lays stress upon the importance of having all rays from the screen projected as nearly in a point as possible, a proposition which is disputed by some of our most able practical projectionists. Personally I am not prepared to say with any degree of assurance who is right.

Mr. Jenkins lays great stress upon the loss of light at the spot, due to the use of waste light in any projection, which we do not say this can be materially reduced, he has observed that the man who says any thing cannot be done has been tried upon by the man who does it. Yet by means of the proper arrangement of the use of the waste light might not be desirable, unless a corrected condenser be used, which same might and would not set up another even more serious trouble. Many of our projector optical systems use an extra large spot because they secure better projection by reason of eliminating the impure light at outer diameter of spot.

And here is the sum of it all. In a nine-line paragraph Mr. Jenkins tells us the optical system of the projector is really not at all complete—is indeed very simple. If this is true, then why does brother Jenkins bother writing papers on it at all. As a matter of fact, the projector optical system is very far from simple. I flitily dispute Mr. Jenkins on this point. The optical system of the modern projector has many complications both before and behind the screen. Here are some of them: (A) Variable size of crater, which sets up many and very complicated difficulties; (B) different in curvature of crater and angle to lens, which affects brightness and reduction of point; (C) the effect of light upon the screen, which has much to do with light brightness; (D) difference of condenser projection lenses, which is immensely important in light conservation and in definition of light on the screen; (E) the size of spot, which affects brightness and purity of light; (I) distance from aperture to projection lens, which is controllable, to an extent, by proper selection of lenses (when there is any selection, which there is not at this time); (J) diameter of projection lens, which has to do with light loss and affects revolving shutter in very short or long focal length lenses; (K) distance from lens to crater, which also has a great deal to do with the image size and focal length; (L) stopping down of light rays, preferably at aerial image of condenser which has to do with sharpness of image on screen and other things.

And to show how these various things interlock when you, for instance, alter distance of condenser from aperture you also alter shutter position, alter distance crater to lens, add or reduce light loss between aperture and lens and affect other things.

Then, too, there is the revolving shutter, with its immensely important problems, all of which, in a way, properly speaking, an integral part of the optical system of the projector, as is also, in a way, the screen itself.

And C. Francis Jenkins says all this is "very simple." Well, I am far from agreeing with him on any point and it is a very difficult thing, and one which may be the subject of much improvement.

No Registered Projectionists.

D. E. McCauley, Moravia, Iowa, wants to know where to apply to become a registered operator.

There is no such thing as a "registered projectionist." Presumably you mean a license projectionist (operator). I am not certain whether or no Ottumwa, Iowa, which you are not far from, has a license law or not. You can find out by addressing the city clerk, enclosing self-addressed, stamped envelope. If not, then surely Des Moines has, and that would be your nearest city. You would have to go to the city you propose applying in, make application, pass an examination and pay a fee. Better find out all particulars from city officials, by mail, before making applications.

"Co-operating in Marketing." (Universal)

A FEW scenes incorporated in this subject found in the 85th release of the Screen Magazine acquaints us with the methods followed by a group of 1,280 farmers on the Pacific coast who decided to cut down expense in the marketing of their product. The land tilled by them comprises a tract about 14 miles square, which is owned by the members of the association. That side of the work shown in the film was photographed during the berry harvest at which time 15,000 pickers are employed. The picking of the raspberries, the grading of them for the market, and the twenty-two cars special on its way to eastern markets is shown in the picture.

"Psychology of Song." (Paramount-Bray)

The first of a series of motion pictures made in conjunction with the Committee on Public Information and dealing with phases of wartime activities with which the public is but very little acquainted, appears in the 133rd release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

Realizing that a man makes the best soldier or sailor only when he is happy, Uncle Sam has stopped at nothing to make his boys not only comfortable physically, but comfortable mentally.

"Keep 'em singing and nothing can lick 'em," says Uncle Sam, and he aims to have a song on every man's lips all of his work day because he knows that a song is an inspiration.

Percy Hemus, former opera and concert star is the song leader at Pelham Bay Naval Training Station. Mr. Hemus passed up a fortune in engagements to sign on with Uncle Sam and he has made life at this great camp one of song and good fellowship.

It matters not if a bat that a sailor has no more voice than a towel or that he can't carry a tune. When the crowd gets going he joins in and shouts the words with a vim that at least helps swell the sound until the well-known waltz rings truly.

To encourage the men, "sing-song" contests between regiments are staged, and there is as great excitement over them as over any athletic contests. The men practice with an earnestness that betokens their keen interest.

"The Food Value of Milk." (Paramount-Bray)

The Bray Studios, Inc., through the co-operation of the Departments of Home Economics of Cornell University, selected a number of the best and most practical ways of using milk, filmed them and will show them on the screen tonight. The main strawberries in the 133rd release of Paramount Bray Pictograph.

It is shown that cottage cheese produced from milk is easily made and that it can be served in many different forms. As a matter of fact, an entire meal from soup to dessert is possible. Such a meal is not only fully as nourishing and palatable as one is in which meats and vegetables are served, but decidedly less expensive.

The United States Food Administration wants every family to use milk freely. There is plenty of it and its nutritive value is recognized as of the highest. Coincident with these advice from Mr. Hoover, practically every college and university in the United States has set to work through their home economics department, to increase its use on American tables.

"Doing the Dips in a Dory." (Ford Motor Company)

This reel of film takes one on a delightful trip through the Ausable Chasm. In subtilite the story of this lovely spot is told, and of course the feature of the picture is the ride on a dory through the rapids of the Ausable river. The scenes have been well photographed and the picture throughout is entertaining.

The Rivoli Theatre, New York City, exhibited during the week of August 4 a series of views commemorating England's entry into the war. These pictures compiled by Charles Urban covered naval, aerial, cavalry and infantry preparations, and scene of actual fighting.

"Aerial Warfare"

E. Dean Parmeelee of the Bray Studios Explains by Means of Animated Drawings the Fighting Technique of the Flying Fighter.

The feature of the 133d release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph is an animated drawing entitled "Aerial Warfare," which illustrates in a graphic manner the many startling tricks resorted to by the aerial fighter in overcoming his adversary.

No branch of warfare has developed so rapidly as the air forces. Not only have planes been made capable of exceeding rapid flight but the aviators are now such complete masters of their craft that they perform the most astounding turns and twists as part of their daily flights.

The superiority of the Allied Air Forces over that of the Huns is due to great extent to the greater daring and ingenuity of the aviators. Practically all of the tricks practiced in combat were first achieved by the flyers of France, England and Italy. The Huns, true to type, have copied their actions, but they are always a step behind, for new and more daring "stunts" are constantly being devised by their adversaries.

Few people know what these aerial acrobatics really are and Mr. Parmeelee has faithfully drawn them. The tail spin, the loop-the-loop, riding the enemies tail, the side-slip and the other equally sensational tricks known by name only, are demonstrated by a very clear idea of what these knights of the air do when in battle, is gained.

"A Dam Catastrophe"

Latest Outing-Chester Offering Combination of Natural History, Comedy and Scenic Beauty.

The Mutual Film Corporation in its latest Outing-Chester offering presents to the public one of the most attractive of semi-educational subjects. The title which at first glance appears to savor of profanity, later clears its reputation when one of the busiest and most sagacious of animals, the beaver, appears on the scene repairing the dam which he and his mate have so carefully constructed after having had it destroyed by the careless humans. The closeups in this picture showing the beaver at work adjusting the sticks and boughs in the most discriminating fashion are unusual. Some comedy has also been worked into some of these scenes. The remainder of the picture has to do with a couple of honeymooners who in imitation of the beaver have decided to try living the simple life. Their difficulties in piloting a homemade raft down a rapid running and beautiful river affords considerable amusement. The picture is interesting enough to please the most ordinary audience as well as the more intelligent.

SPOKANE, WASH.—When Evelyn Brent set sail for New York to assume her new duties with the Washington Motion Picture Corporation she was met at sea by the new film director of the company, who did a marathon from station to station as he was advised she would arrive. He did not know which route. There were four trains arriving about that time at three different stations and Miss Brent had not fancied that Spokane had so many trains at one time.
She was rushed from the train to Hayden Lake, Idaho, for breakfast, where she fed the company’s pet bear with sugar from her hand (rather gingerly as she later admitted), and after a dip in the lake (in a pretty Jersey bathing suit), she was whisked back to Spokane and to the Davenport Hotel, where she found the company’s pet pears and a box of candy on the dresser. Miss Brent said she was well pleased with Spokane to date, everything was changed from Broadway, and was delighted with the northern Idaho pine forest through which she was taken on her trip to Hayden Lake.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

Unity of Musical Purpose Brings Better Service

We live in the age of unions. The keen competition in industrial lines has forced upon men the significance of the axiom, "Unified we stand, divided we fall." The playing of the pictures has become an industry because of its magnitude of operation, and the essentiality of the work. At present every leader is doing his own work in his own way, drudging out the hours of employment, which being long, preclude his learning of the advances made in his field. He has had no training and devoted to his interests, giving him up-to-date information. What they are doing in the big houses in the large cities, gets to his ears by instinctive hearsay. This has a tendency to confuse him. In spite of these drawbacks, it is remarkable how much progress has been made in the musical interpretation of pictures. But we feel that the time has come when there should be a greater unity of purpose, feeling and brotherhood in the ranks of the film musicians.

The Moving Picture World realizes the importance of the problem of uniting the theatre musicians in such a way that the audience might hear the pictures brought to them in the picture industry in general. We have spent the last six months in searching out the detached and distant musician with the view to ascertaining his needs in his chosen profession. From the data we have received, we believe that this department, in its enlarged form, will give better service in the future than in the past. "Music for the Pictures" will henceforth contain an interesting and leading article dealing with the varied phases of the profession.

"Music for the Pictures" will henceforth include a condensed feature of the department. It will contain a review of music rendered at the big New York picture palaces and other notable performances throughout the country. An educational feature of the department will be a thumb-nail history of our patriotic songs, telling you about the composer, the reason for the song and interesting facts connected with its birth and growth. There will be a page devoted to the latest musical "hits" and a "Leader's Service Department," which will be found answers to your many problems and a "Roll of Honor," calling attention to special musical numbers, well adapted to picture playing.

The cue sheet problem, which has become a bugbear to the leader, will be dealt with in a classified and larger form. Here you will find a cue sheet for private use, which has been condensed, alphabetically arranged and clearly comprehensible to every leader. It will not be necessary to use the entire book upon the rack. These sheets can be used separately and returned to the files for playing a "repeat date." The arrangement will be uniform and standardized, no matter what producer releases the picture. This new idea has been praised by all leaders who have seen it, and we anticipate every musician will welcome this progressive service.

There is no field in the musical profession where such great quantities of music are bought yearly and used so profusely. A pianist with a library of five hundred numbers, considers he is well equipped for his work, but five hundred selections would not last a month even if it were possible to play them all in the picture theatre. Songs will bear almost a continuous repetition, but a leader dare not repeat his numbers too frequently.

One of the drawbacks with which every leader is familiar is the dearth of new music. To secure such is by means of catalogues, which are not definite, or by personal search through publishing houses. Inasmuch as the large majority of publishers are situated in New York City, the out-of-town director must rely on lists which may trickle through to him. We have been surprised and grieved at the musical antiquities forced upon the people who visit the out-of-way theatres.

Our aim will be to bring to the attention of the picture playing musician all numbers suitable for his use from the various publishing houses with a short review upon their picture possibilities, proving a wonderful boon to the leaders throughout the country.

Those things done to us by the hand of one in equal rank are regarded of greater worth than the advice emanating from the mealy mind of the efficient expert. Therefore, we shall be pleased to give space in our columns to interesting letters dealing with the solution of the leaders' problems. Give us the benefit of your experience that your brother may profit thereby. This will make for unity of brotherhood and create in this column a mutual confidence club, interesting and educational to all.

In this connection, it might not be premature to suggest the formation of a Picture Playing Club, the membership of which would consist of musicians who are earning a living playing for pictures. Let us hear an expression of opinion on this matter. We can assure you we are strongly for it. When we place our profession upon a more dignified basis in the picture industry, we reap for ourselves the rewards of better art.

The Moving Picture World in enlarging your department, officially recognizes the musician as a vital factor in the film industry. It extends the hand of friendship and makes itself a medium for mutual mingling and friendly fraternizing. It joins the hand of the producer with that of the leader, delivering to him a service cue sheets that heretofore has been anything but satisfactory. Its whole-hearted efforts, its unstinted expense, and its ever-repeating progressiveness should receive the praise and popular support of all musicians in the country. Make the Moving Picture World your Bible and use "Music for the Pictures" your best loved text.

Music At the Strand.

D. W. Griffith has rightly gained the name of "The Master of Picturcraft" in his picture, "The Great Love," presented at the Strand during the week of August 11, shows his clever handwork and artistic touches. Notwithstanding this fact the music poorly portrayed what Mr. Griffith tried to interpret in his wonderful picture.

The fine and well-known songs were used as themes and suited the roles admirably. There was a lack of smoothness to the singing, which detracted from the picture considerably and we felt that the fault lay in poor modulation. At times there was no modulation whatever, while at others only a drum-roll could be heard in joining two numbers of extraneous keys. It is evident that the music belonged to a score, which was re-created by which gained no credit for themselves for slipshod method. "The Synchrony was good, but the use of "The butter in the bedchamber scene was anything but appropriate.

The overture selection from "I Pagliacci" by Leoncavallo was handled by Conductor Edwards. The rendition was traditional in every respect, and although the theatre once in a while beat the conductor to the note, we are safe in saying that there could not be any exception taken to the interpretation.

The back-set showed a Venetian canal bordered with Italian foliage, half hiding the picturesque bungalows in the distance. Strand topical review followed as usual was well-filled and played.

An innovation was used in the idea of community singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," led by Miss Cora Tracy, contralto.

A recent issue of these columns we dwelt extensively upon the educational value and propaganda purposes of Community singing in the picture theatres. Our suggestion was that a slide be used in order that, by having the house darkened, the singing would be louder and more spontaneous. However, Mr. Edel has evolved a new feature by having a patriotic address, showing the history of our flag. This was followed by singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the audience from a booklet donated by Hinda, Hayden & Efrayden. The edition with words and music and is exceptionally legible in spite of the condensed space. The idea is splendid and should be followed up in some form by every exhibitor in the country.

The performance closed with the usual excellent organ solo.

Music at the Rialto.

We dropped into the Rialto sufficiently early one evening to avoid the usual crowd of spectators.

It was a scene where, apparently, we were one of only a handful, the entire performance was gone through as if the house was completely empty. The music itself, the orchestra, gave us a new appreciation for the discipline of the theatre and the conscientious endeavors of its employees.

The Rialto, conducted by Maurice Riegelsfeld, Mr. Riesfeld is always at his best, and on this occasion his orchestra was masterly, and in good musical taste.

The scene, showing scenes in Pachuchas, Mexico, was admirably fitted with excerpts from the various operas. The scene showed a stage and a banked orchestra, with birds carefully arranged for the curtain and immediate projection of picture.

The picture was well fitted with excerpts from the operas, particularly from the Shubert production of it, and the quaint but simple memory themes that were new proves the greatness of this atmosphere. The people who came to see a picture heard a symphony of blended tone, beautifully purified by the beauty of Art as exemplified in the combination of music and color. Everyone was impressed with this aesthetic treatment, but every feature has its artistic possibilities.

"Home, Sweet Home."

Probably the sentiment most deeply implanted in the human heart is love of kindred and home. Someone has said that a home is a place that the person particularly in time of war. But, in the last analysis, one's country is one's homin. What is home? In what is home.

When, in October, 1912, John Howard Payne sent to Sir Henry Bishop, composer of music for Cuvret Garden, a manuscript, he did not know that in a month or two that piece of music he would be sent off to the theaters and would be heard by millions. The story is a sort of patriotic fancy introducing "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys Are Marching," a piece of music which is known as "Star Spangled Banner." We could not understand the analogy. "Keep the Home Fires Burning," sung by the orchestra, was a delightful innovation, while "Throw Out the Life Line" had no place in the score and was a mere appendage.

Nothing is gained by burlesquing a religious ritual, and much harm may come from that.

Josephine Garavelli sang "Caro Nome," from Rigoletto, in a fashion academic. She really is a dramatic soprano essaying coloratura.

The feature "Green Eyes" was well played, but the Southern atmosphere was not sufficiently distinctive to be noticeable. The expandal light victual "Stage" was well and at no time did the orchestra predominate over the feature.

The bill closed with selections from "Nobody Home," played by the orchestra, and the usual comedy and an organ solo.

"The Blue Bird," with Charles Driver as Prince Despere, the player, this number with fine feeling and true interpretation.

Washington Society Hears "Blue Bird."

Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C., believes firmly that music and its related art, dancing, are mighty factors in putting over pictures. His recent presentation of the Paramount feature, "Blue Bird," is an unmistakably his forceful-ness of purpose.

The complete presentation prologue was an asset.

Overture by the augmented symphony orchestra, featuring Clare Kummer's song, "The Blue Bird," with slow curtain revealing the symbolic setting, the white fleecey clouds drifting softly by; "The Blue Bird" second chorus sung off stage. Gradually the expandal light victual "Stage" was followed up in some form by every exhibitor in the country.

died in 1883, lived most of his life in Paris, concluded that all the German music of D. W.

The propaganda theme of "The Common and his musical setting is a reflection of his enthusiasm for the cause of war as exce-

Belwin, Inc., and Motion Picture Music.

The old adage that a "workman cannot work at half a stake" is firmly endorsed by musicians engaged in film interpretation. Whatever their ability may be they cannot interpret the screen action without appreciable music.

As reported in these columns a few weeks ago, a unique combination has just been formed of the entire catalogue of the Cinema Music Company, S. M. Berg, whose service to the film industry is well known, and the catalogues of Belwin's Copyright Arrangements compare favorably with those of America's foremost musicians, has elicited a 50 percent increase in sales.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

SURELY all are interested in the Davenport family, as stage and screen players, so it is not pleasant to tell of the sad day when the last member of the once noted troupe of five—the fourth generation of the family—May Davenport at Forest Hills, where his talented sister, Fanny, lies. He had been ailing for a long time, so that the end was foreseen by his immediate family, though a shock to others. Many floral tributes came from family and friends. Harry Davenport—May Davenport Seymour and Blanche Davenport—were present. There is one daughter, Marjory, who greatly resembles her late Aunt Fanny, and who has recently become engaged to a young army officer.

Just had a chat with Anita Stewart over here, doing a picture at the exclusive North Shore, and it was good to see Vernon Steele in support. The news has gone forth about her transfer from the Vitagraph to Louis B. Mayer of the Hub, who promises to do much for this star. Miss Stewart found most unassuming, natural, and girlish, with no inclination to shine away from the screen. Some of her local interviews have been queer and no one mentioned "Hubby" Cameron, who is in the service, stationed around here at present.

An embarrassment of pictures has been ours of late, but space forbids the mention all. "The Firefly of France" went strong, and everyone likes Wally Reid. Features were admirably written titles and fine support. No, Wally was not the Firefly, for that honor went to Raymond Hatton, the embodiment of versatility. We liked the way the story unfolded, the suspense of it all, and we did think Ray had something special in him and was worth keeping an eye on in this offering! On the same program was "The Vamp," clever, well done by Enid Bennett and a selected cast. Charles French: our old friend, in "The Guilty Man," made good use of his talents. Of course, a boy who plays a spy. This is the very best picture seen with Miss Bennett. For a weekly we had thousands of troops at Gettysburg "waiting orders." If you recall this historic place you can imagine the effect on the audience when the men were disclosed making the word "Gettysburg" and then breaking ranks.

What a sparkling picture "Good Night, Paul!" is! Yes, a bit risque, in a spot or two, and inconsistent, but good farce, and so well done by Constance Talmadge, Harrison Ford and that funny player, John Stepping! Fine summer picture. "Calling All Girls," we must say the lighter stuff these trying days. This reminds me to ask why the weeklies show us wrecks, fires and floods, for nobody is interested, unless concerned directly. Mutt and Jeff continue to edify all, but we like best the pictures from France just now.

"Shark Monroe" displayed some extra fine titles in the first reels with a background of the ocean in motion. Several around me exclaimed, "how cool," for it was seen on one of the hottest nights of the season. Of course, W. S. Hart has his following, but I do wish he would give us a picture now and then with a different theme and done in the East. A sailor next me was a bit wrathful over the terms used during the storm at sea like "Furl the flying topsail," as if there was such a thing. This chap was up on matters nautical, and he was plainly disgusted at the captain's orders. However, few there knew the "dif," so there you are! There was some cave man stuff and the customary ending, hero winning out. Splendid Alaskan atmosphere. Best work next to the hero was that done by Bertha Sprote, Hart's pal, and "white" all through.

A very good friend of mine declared that she did not like "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," but I was agreeably disappointed, and found it not only wholesome, but well done, by the Vitagraph company. Edythe Chapman, Myra Porter, Clifton Earle, and others. The Picture is sure to go with the Catholic set, especially as it has religious touches and a splendid finale. They gave the star George Le Guere for her wayward brother, and here we had an illustration on sobs versus loyalty, in dealing with the paternal. Willette Kershaw made a pathetic wife, who went out of life too soon. It is a human, compelling story, well directed by James Sieger.

The big hit over here of late was the Fairbanks picture, "Say, Young Fellow," for it had a new idea well worked out in double exposure stunts, the star posing as a little mentor or good boy, that is, "the innocent." What most of our likes was the delicious romance of the village spinster and a bachelor, impersonated by James Neill, and his versatile wife, Edythe Chapman. It was a delightful change from Doug's swift athletics. Titles were excellent, causing hearty laughter.

On the same program was Clara K. Young in "The Claw," not especially convincing in spots and too much melodrama for this clever star.

"You Can't Believe Everything," a Triangle with little Swanson, had one or two novel features, like the "Neptune Dinner," the guests in effete bathing suits, disclosing some acquirements to cause big laughs. In "The Service Station," running picture for Madge Kennedy, I saw Clarence Oliver for the first time, and doesn't he look like his father? This picture ought to be a go, for it has a motive, good lighting, and is so well cast. Following this was "How Could You, Jean?" very entertaining, "Little Mary," as usual, giving pleasure. During that week Mrs. Tyer gave us "Opportunity," a Metro picture for Viola Dana doing odd stunts like going through a sheet of glass. It is original and ambitious, and running up against two men who don't "do a thing" to the little masquerader. There is too much running about in pajamas by the trio. It was some sight! Glad to see Edward Abeles, that sterling actor, now in the pictures.

"To the Highest Bidder" proved a novelty, and I have not seen anything funnier in a long time than Frank Norcross as auctioneer. Why his name is not in the printed cast is beyond me, for he is the very best good man I have seen in the Vitagraph. Alice Joyce and Percy Standing are the stars in this. Two other good Vitagraphs at the Fenway were "Ragged Lives," with the dependable Harry Mowry, Betty Elysee, Eulalie Jensen and "The Girl in His House," featuring Earl Williams, Harry Lonsdale and Grace Darmond—fine picture, good for repeats. Splendid photography and all else.

"Everywoman's Husband," good picture, with lesson on domesticity and how to keep "hubby" happy at home in spite of mother-in-law. I caught many around me nudging each other when the lines and cuts shot home. It was convincing, and showed that a house is not always a home. Good twist at the end of this.

Hayakawa has again scored in "The Bravest War," and it was good to see his dainty little wife, Tsutu Aki, with him. Florence Vidor was beautiful, but why the make-up? For a supposed Oriental, she was far removed in appearance. "Silent Hall" was the polished villain in the play ended well, despite the hit-and-run. "Old Ed," as he was known, had a long cast of Artcraft players. Here we had Florence Vidor again, but there was a lot of rough stuff, though the beauty parlor doings got the laugh, especially when Sylvia Ashton emerged more syphilic and quite attractive by contrast with the "before" habit. Elliott Dexter did not seem to fit as the husband.

Well I take off my hat to Director Blache for giving us such good business in the Metro picture, "A Man's World," and to Rachel Crothers for writing the play on a timely theme—man's alleged supremacy in the world of morals, etc. etc. We have a boy, running up the kid and his dog, who did quite a few stunts to make us all laugh. Except for a bad make-up of lips, Emily Stevens showed up to advantage and was well supported by the trio of Borzoi mains, bulls, etc. A Metro, "A Man's World," is a nice little romance, with the lamented Chapin. On the same bill we had dear little Minter, in "Social Briers," quite the best Mutual seen her in weeks; the small town stuff had new features and made us laugh at visualizing the west with "Two Thieves," "Irene" and "The Girl in the Street," telling of the adventures of an urchin and his dog. It is hard to tell what that dog is up to all through, and some comedy elements to make this a go anywhere. How we did laugh over the hero's roadster tuned to speed high lights, and his later efforts, like suddenly acquiring religion, in order to hear and see the heroine in church.
Manufacturers' Advance Notes

World Pictures Releases Five Subjects in September

DURING September World Pictures will release five big productions on the screen, and one of these is really a "special," and each of them possesses drawing power. First on the list of galas comes Jules Erskine with Frank Mayo in "The Power and the Glory." This picture has been filmed from the bestselling novel of the same name by Grace MacGowan Cooke. Miss Elvitude appears in the role of Jonnie Considine and Leroy Mayo. It is true that the cast in the cast are Madge Evans, Albert Hart, Clay Clement, Jack Drumier and Johnny Hines." Trouble," has been assigned to "Hook or Crook," which will be released on September 16. The story is an entertaining one, it is light and pleasing. Supporting are Jack Drumier, Henry Warwick, Nola Cee, Frank Dime and, Alice Chapin.

To Him That Hath" is the title of the September 9 release, and it stars Monta Clayton. The picture has been filmed from the best selling novel of the same name by the man who is known as the "author of the works of a man who has taken another's blame for the fault so that the guilty man's memory may be humble." It has been handled by people of the mission which he has founded.

Supporting Mr. Love are Regina Carlington, George Scott, Margaret Sargent, Ethel Kaye, Marlon Barney, and Edward Elkas.

The final production for the month is the picture "Two Loop Houses," and it stars Monta Clayton ever made for the World. It is "A Soul Without Windows," and it is a tense, gripping and tremendously interesting drama of the two Loop House girls. Mabel Wayne appears in this production in support of Miss Clayton.

Wellington Cross to be Featured in Triangle Plays

WELLINGTON CROSS, favorably known as a vaudeville headliner, and also for good work in various musical reviews, has forsaken the glare of the footlights for the silent drama, and will make his initial appearance in screen work under the Triangle trade-mark. His first strong circular letter to the press," in which he will be jointly featured with Claire Anderson. The directing will be by Fred Jackson, a New York playwright of reputation. Director and producer has already filmed many of the first scenes in "Tony America," featuring Francis McDonald in the title role. Many extras were used in these opening sets and the atmosphere of picturesque Italy was re--created, a surprising bit of production being the crooning of Yvonne Pavis, Mrs. Harry Davenport, Dorothy Gircal, Rae Godfrey, Harold Hall, and others.

Director Jack Conway and his western company made a two-weeks' trip for the filming at Santa Monica, the ranch shooting the final pictures for "Desert Law." This story, by Louis H. Kilpatrick, was originally called "Mountain Law."

Director Hopper and the entire cast of "Mystic Faces," in which the little Japanese star, Jack Abbe, is to be featured, have been haunting the back alleys of the Los Angeles' Chinatown district for the past week, doing some "atmosphere" stuff.

The Atom," with Pauline Starke and Harry Mestayer in the leading roles, is nearing completion, and Director Dowan has now started filming the remaining scenes, following that part of the scenario which calls for western "background" stuff—scene and otherwise.

Albert Parker, who is handling the megaphone on "The Secret Code," featuring Gloria Swanson and Barney Sherry, has alternated between the Triangle studio and "locations" for practically the entire week.
De Luxe Now Has Second Subject Before Public

With the release on August 17 of "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance, Doris Kenyon, as the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc, now has two productions on the market. The first, "The Street of Seven Stars," was released early in July. Reports from exhibitors are that it has been successful. Its patronage comes from an unexpected angle, with a large number of people attending the theatre in pairs, and those who have not seen the story being shown are coming back for a second time.

At a private showing given a few days ago of "The Inn of the Blue Moon," the general opinion expressed was that the picture would make a decided hit, especially with those who like a clean, interesting story which leaves the imagination to fill in the remaining parts. In the dual role of twin sisters, one a country girl and the other a society belle of New York, Miss Kenyon takes full advantage of the opportunity to display her versatility. Her winsome personality fits admirably both the characters. In a number of scenes in which she is shown simultaneously as both sisters, especially interesting situations develop. Some of the exterior scenes in this picture are romantic and beautiful and the photography is distinctly out of the ordinary.

Fox August Bulletin Out.

The largest and most attractive number of the Exhibitors' Bulletin, published by the box-office corporation, has just been issued for August. This number, which is printed in blue ink, has fifty-two pages of a much larger size than previously. It contains two pages of drawings and photographs of Fox stars and events in the Fox organizations of interest to exhibitors. The cover design is a handsome drawing of Tom Mix, done by Nadiehney of the New York Herald.

Among the strange features of especial interest to exhibitors are several pages showing how showmen in different parts of the country have adopted means to put pictures over successfully. There is a page article on Frank W. Buhler of Philadelphia, describing his methods. Another page is titled, "Says His Pocketbook to Your Pocketbook," being the testimony of different exhibitors on how they showed certain productions. A page of editorials gives helpful advice to exhibitors on the conduct of their business, and still another page is devoted to stories of the campaign, "What the Other Fellow Is Doing." "Flares from the Film Trenches" is the caption of a page.

"Fires of Youth" (Bluebird). "Fires of Youth," the Bluebird release for August 25, is a story of the failure that often attends the attempt of a man in the autumn of his life to mate with a girl in the spring of life's cycle. The scenario is by Fred Myton. Rupert Julian produced the film. Ruth Clifford plays the leading role as Lucile Linforth, wife of a man twice her age.

Lon Chaney, supporting Monroe Saliba in Bluebird's production, "That Devil Haretoe," is establishing a record as a character actor. He has played every racial type from Hindu to Hotentot.

Desmond and Pauline Stark Featured in Triangles

The first Triangles release scheduled for the week of August 25 offers Pauline Stark in "Daughter Angele," a picture described as a melodrama with a pretty romance and a new war angle. It tells of the adventures encountered by Pauline Starke as Angele, who is hindered at a reconciliation with her wealthy grandparent through the efforts of her housekeeper who would win his estate for herself and her son. All become involved in a spy plot which is foiled through the vigilance of Angele's faith and her young lover.

In the cast with Miss Starke are two new Triangles players, Harold Holland, the heavy, and Lulu Warrenton. William Do-
Fox Printing 32,000-Word Serial on Pershing Story

A 32,000-word help to exhibitors booking the great patriotic picture, "Why America Will Win!" the Fox Film Corporation has sent out, through a big newspaper syndicate, a 32,000-word serial story on the life of Gen. John J. Pershing, upon whose career "Why America Will Win!" is based. The serial will appear in 500 of the most prominent newspapers in the country.

Not only will this serial appear in these newspapers, but advertisements linking up the story to the film will appear in all the newspapers used by the serial. This is the story will be widely advertised, and it is expected it will have a great box-office impact in the promotion of the picture.

The serial is illustrated with exclusive copyrighted photographs obtained by Fox organization, in the course of long research into General Pershing's career, from his boyhood days in La-clede, Mo., to the present.

This serial will soon be appearing in all the newspapers that have taken it. There are twenty installments, and it is believed that the story will make every newspaper reader in the country familiar with the life of the great American leader. To obtain this unusual help to exhibitors, it is said the Fox organization employed several trained investigators who ransacked the files of the War Department, interviewed friends of General Pershing, and gathered materials to obtain first-hand information.

In addition to the Fox corporation's issuing more than a million striking window cards, to be placed by exhibitors booking "Why America Will Win!"

Roscoe Makes a Move

Roscoe Arbuckle has removed his company to the Diando studio, Glen-dale, Cal., where his next Paramount company will be produced. It will play the Mexican border story requiring space and an atmosphere unobtainable at Long Beach. However, the comedian retains his offices, home, and beach privileges in the latter city, and the move is only temporary, though the company may not return to the beach if other arrangements are made meantime. The organization has no connection with the Diando Company other than to rent studio space.

Meanwhile, "The Cook" has been completed and is ready for release. The new location is said to afford every facility for splendid scenic locations, being in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada, with much open country covered with undergrowth and with many old telephone lines, and in the mountains, as well as in the canyons which may be simulated if necessary.

Church Supports Kathleen Clifford

Kathleen Clifford has freed Church as her leading man in "Angel Child," her first picture since released September 9 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Miss Clifford is the diminutive star from Chard South, the smallest man in the world, less than five feet tall and weighs ninety-eight pounds.

Pathe's "Her Man" Is Story of Cumberland Mountains

Intelligence and refinement she feels far above these men and women of the Cumberlands. She believes her mission in this life is to raise these people to her own standards of living. And yet—when the man she loves has learned to love—this uncouth mountaineer falls a victim to the feudist's bullet, the venge of civilization vanished by those once again the cave woman, and with Winchester in hand, she defends her man from the onslaught.

The above, in brief, is the lesson of nature taught by the photodrama, "Her Man," based on Charles Neville Buck's successful novel, "The Battle Cry," produced by the Advance Motion Picture Corporation. "Her Man" will be released by Pathé Exchange, Inc., September 8.

Ralph W. Ince has surprised himself in directorship according to those who have seen private presentations of this drama of the mountains. A company of players went to the heart of the Cumberlands. Not only are the exterior scenes beautiful and correct as to detail, but all interior settings used are the interior of bona fide homes of mountain cabins and many of these types appear during the action of the story.

No expense has been spared to make "Her Man" a special feature in every meaning of the word. Little touches are many and varied. Even the old-fashioned crazy-quilt and carpet-chain rugs are to be seen.

Elaine Hammerstein plays the difficult role of Juanita Holand, born to wealth and refinement, who finally battles in behalf of her man, W. Lawson Butt, the distinguished Simplex actor who appeared in the stage production of "The Garden of Allah," enacts the part of "Bad Anne," the head of the clan of bloodthirsty, and who finally in regenerating the love of Juanita. Other players in these machines have been installed by Erville Alderson, Cecil Chichester, George Cooper and Josephine Morde.

Keeney's Fourth Subject Now in Finishing Stage

PREPARATIONS are being made by Frank A. Keeney to star Jewel Carmen, in spite of the fact that William Fox has announced he will begin injuction proceedings the moment she starts work with the Keeney forces. He intends to surround her with a strong company.

Mr. Keeney's scenario editor, Bennett Masson, is now engaged in editing and titling the fourth of the Keeney productions. It is entitled "The Uphill Path," and is by the late Paul Armstrong. It stars Catherine Calvert who is now appearing in "A Romance of the Under-world," another Armstrong story. The Uphill Path deals with the struggle of a girl to live down her past. It is dramatic and is full of human nature throughout.

The next Keeney release will be "Marriage," by Guy Bolton, who will be given to the public the middle of September. Mr. Keeney is holding up the release in order to catch the better business of the fall. He is well satisfied with the success of his two releases thus far. They have done excellently, in spite of the handicapping effect of the summer weather. All the Keeney productions are distributed through the Sherry Service.

Simplex Sales Going Well on Coast

A FIVE-ACT screen romance by Elaine Hammerstein, "Little Miss Moneymaker," has been accepted by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Francis X. Bushman, the Simplex actor who has recently joined Metro's directorial staff. The story contains some unusual features, and Director Brabin promises some genuine surprises in connection with it. The scene is laid in and around New York City, though some of the characters are transplanted from the far west. Surprising as it may appear, Little Miss Moneybags will introduce some phase of metropolis life that are new to the screen, and unfamiliar by those miles from Broadway and Forty-second street. The release date will subsequently be announced by Metro.

"Italy's Flaming Front" Released by First National

ITALY'S FLAMING FRONT," latest and most impressive of all film productions to reach this country since the counter-stroke against Austria was so brilliantly executed by the armies of General Diaz, is one of the features of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on August 26.

The production will be put out in six reels, with separate prints in all languages since its exhibition at the Rivoli theatre, New York, in weekly episodes, and in its revised form has been in and out of the last degree by a committee of leading trade paper editors and film critics who have watched the last rushes of the big spectacle at the Miles projection room.

Supported by a joint conclave made up of members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and representatives of the Italian military authorities in this country, "Italy's Flaming Front" in the form that it will be shown to the public offers striking evidence of rare dramatic selection and good taste.

There are scores of scenes that raise the enthusiasm to fever heat, but not one that could arouse a sense of repulsion in the mind of the most impressionable. The inspiring and exciting side of the spectacle conflict being waged by the champions of democracy in the south is alone reproduced.

"In placing this film before our Allies in America," said Lieutenant M. M. Proctor of the Sixth Italian Fortress Artillery, now representing his country's film interests in this country, "we have been guided by the desire to show the citizens of this republic as many of the notable achievements of our military and naval forces as possible without forcing into the foreground the unpleasant elements in the task of smashing the Hun. This means that we want to place our cause before the greatest number of people possible, feeling that once Italy's aims and efforts are fully understood in America there will be no further necessity to break the handclasp of good will and brotherhood now uniting the two countries."

"Cleopatra" Continues Its Sensational Success

ALTHOUGH more than 5,000,000 persons already have seen "Cleopatra," the great Theda Bara portrayal of the love of the woman who was the world, the Fox corporation states that more bookings for this drama are coming in daily. Several of these are for repeat dates.

"Cleopatra" has just played two weeks in Boston at Loew's Columbia and Orpheum theatres. It has also played the Bowdoin Square theatre, Boston.

Miami, Fla., has booked the production for this week, and Fort Wayne, Ind., has taken it for a week. Ten cities and towns in Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois will see the picture through bookings made by the Fitzpatrick & McElroy and the Butterfield circuits.

Right on the heels of a showing at Kunkly's Washington theatre, Detroit, the Mile High theatre of that city has been signed up for a week's stand.

"Cleopatra" opened Aug. 11 at the Colonial theatre, Akron, to sensational business, and it will play nineteen days in the Orpheum and allied houses in Cleveland. In the Texas territory, the Hancock opera house at Austin has just booked "Cleopatra," and the Jile in Denver has taken the production for a repeat booking.

Mary MacLaren

Of the dull mockery of theatrical life in certain strata and of its deceptions and cruelties "Bread" gives vivid portrayal. A loaf of bread is the means of providing the turning point in the young girl's career and shows her the way to better things.

"Yellow Dog" Campaign Is Spreading Over Country

THE nation-wide campaign to spread the spirit of loyalty started by the Jewel Productions has attracted the support of many great commercial houses and business organizations throughout the country, as well as state and city officials.

The infectious spirit of Americanism engendered by Henry Irving Dodge's story, "The Yellow Dog," is remarkable in that the book is not a war story except in that it deals with social conditions as they apply to patriotism prevailing in the average suburban town of today. Yet, the appearance of the story in magazine and later in book form and then supplemented by the distribution of the literature prepared by Jewel Productions has aroused the fighting spirit of the civilian population of America.

It has conjured leaders from the most unexpected sources; men and women in all walks of life have stepped forward and are leading campaigns that are stamping out enemy propaganda, and it is safe to predict that when the Jewel Productions fires the last gun in the campaign to suppress Prussian propaganda by presenting the film version of the "Yellow Dog" the public will view the production attack upon the mongrel patriot as a bygone species.

Among the big commercial houses that have taken up the campaign are the Black Clawson Company, manufacturers of paper and pulp mill machinery, Hamilton, Ohio; the Kewaunee Company, of Kewaunee, Wis., one of the biggest manufacturers of laboratory furniture; Cleveland Twist Drill Company, of Milwaukee, and the Toledo Exchange Club.

In Wheeling, West Virginia, the Yellow Dog Campaign is in the hands of Wheeling Commercial Association and is accomplishing great things to "Yellow Dog" clubs are forming in all sections of the country.
Matt Moore is Leading Man in Blanche Sweet Company

In the production of Harry Garson's screen version of Rupert Hughes' story, "The Unpardonable Sin," which ran as a magazine serial and has just appeared in book form, Blanche Sweet will have as her leading man Matt Moore, who has just been added to the personnel of the Garson forces.

Mr. Moore's experience has been gained both on the speaking stage and in a wide range of motion picture work. Before his entrance into the photoplay field he spent six years on the stage in dramatic work. Since entering motion pictures his sterling work has attracted wide attention, having appeared with William Fielding in "The Wild Goose Chase," also with Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan." His latest screen appearance was with Elsie Ferguson in "The Heart of the Wild." "The Unpardonable Sin" will in all probability be followed by "Told in the Hills," the first of Marah Ellis Ryan's stories to be filmed.

Miss Sweet has practically completed the purchase of gowns and wardrobe and will return to the Coast within a week to start work on "The Unpardonable Sin." The picture will be made at the Sunset studio, which Mr. Garson has leased in Los Angeles.

Goldwyn Weeks in Middle West.

Omaha and Minneapolis are running a neck and neck race in staging "Goldwyn Weeks." Several weeks ago the Strand and Elgin theatres of Omaha played Goldwyn pictures simultaneously for an entire week. Now comes a great "Goldwyn Week" in Minneapolis and an equally successful engagement of two of Goldwyn's most popular stars. Starting August 6, the Strand theatre, of Minneapolis, played Madame Kenneth in her Goldwyn patriotic production, "The Service Star." Miss Kennedy played to large and enthusiastic audiences during a four-days' engagement. Following "The Service Star" the Strand featured another Goldwyn success, Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model," giving Goldwyn productions eleven straight days in one of the leading and most progressive houses in Minneapolis.

Real Negro Camp-meeting in Dorothy Dalton Picture

The trouble that sometimes ensues when a man past middle age weds a girl is depicted in "Green Eyes," Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount picture. This is an Ine picture, directed by R. William Neill, and is scheduled for release August 26.

The husband becomes insanely jealous of his young wife and disaster almost ensues. But through a strange climax the tragedy is averted and peace and happiness follow the turbulent period of the marital career.

"Green Eyes" is laid in the South and includes a real old-fashioned negro camp-meeting for "color." To make certain that this camp-meeting would be faithfully reproduced Ine engaged more than fifteen hundred colored people, all residents of Los Angeles and vicinity, and took them by a special train to the small town of Norwalk, where, in a shaded grove, a regular camp-meeting was held, with the exhorters, the colored choir, the pickaninnies clinging to the skirts of their "mammies," and the brothers and sisters who were supposed to "get ligon."

Director R. William Neill, who held the shouting of the enthusiastic colored singers, had much difficulty in making the shouting of an actual married at the proper moment, he might as well have tried to stop a Niagara. It was a scene that had all the "frenzy" of the regulation camp-meeting. There were tables loaded down with "eats"; good-natured young colored fellows and "workers" in colored damseis, while the more staid of the colored aggregation at once took to the religious scenes with great interest and fervor.

Miss Dalton as the young wife is said to give a performance lacking nothing. Jack Holt as the husband is declared to have accomplished a splendid piece of work, while the remainder of the cast is apparently excellently chosen. Ella Stuart Carson wrote the story.

Maciste, "Cabiria" Samson, Coming in Screen Serial

MACISTE, the herculean Adonis of the screen, "discovered" by Gabriele D'Annunzio for the outstanding character in "Cabiria," and later the much-discussed star of "The Warrior," returns to the screen shortly in what Harry Raver terms "the most unusual serial ever offered the American fan." No announcement has been made as to the title of the "Maciste" serial that he and his director, Pasrione, while serving the colors.

When it is remembered that this Samsonic star enacted the role of "The Warrior" while serving as a soldier in the Italian army and that the Associated Press dispatches from Rome reported him killed in action cable advice from Turin disproved the report by stating that he was only wounded and was "enjoying his usual appetite!" The new serial, according to Mr. Raver, has been in course of production since July, 1917, and was finished only the week ago, the delay being caused by the war activities of both "Maciste" and his director. Pastrone, while serving the colors.

No decision has been reached by Harry Raver in the matter of exploiting the serial. Raver says, however, that the picture would not be given a "Broadway run" at his expense, as the star, backed by the earning power of his previous productions, has sufficient prestige to put the serial over and, as "The Warrior" was sold outright after its run at the Criterion theatre last summer, Mr. Raver may decide to dispose of his North American rights to the new picture without exploitation on his own part.

A large part of the original, the interiors. In these scenes sixty manne- quins will appear and display the latest style.

Essanay's "Young America" Is in Assembling Room

The new George K. Spoor feature taken from the Cohan and Harris stage successes of Schieber's Operaum and Rainbow, "Young America," has been completed as far as the taking of scenes, both interior and exteriors. The assembling of the pic- ture is rapidly being completed, and a story unusually striking in photography, as well as strong in plot and action. It is a timely play, touching on the spirit of young America in time of a crisis to the nation.
Many Features in Pathé's
Official War Review No. 8

A DREADNOUGHT of the air is one of the facts pictured in the Official War Review No. 8, produced by the Division of Films and released August 10 in the United States by the Pathé News Co., Inc. One of the giant Handley-Page bombing planes, used by the hundreds of the Allies in raids on much of the industrial sections and aviation bases, is pictured. The late Sergeant Frank Baylis, the American ace killed over France, is shown here accounting for his twelfth German flyer; an enemy battle-plane and its crew brought down with it. The five-reeler, which is produced by the French aviation department bellowing the Cross of the Legion of Honor on the French fighting pilot, Lieutenant Marshall, two famous air fighters, and Minister of War Clemenceau, "The Tiger of France," includes other pictures presented in connection with the Allied aerial war.

The Official War Review also shows the great line of motor trucks carrying provisions from the American bases in France to the troops fighting gallantly in the front line trenches.

Fox to Make Big Drive
On Kellerman Subjects

A SPECIAL drive will be made the latter part of August for bookings of "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellerman three-reeler, announced by the Fox corporation, for bookings of "A Daughter of the Gods," the Annette Kellerman submarine phantasy. "Queen of the Seven Seas" will be released for booking at an individual basis. The picture will be shown in the biggest theatres the Fox company has for the four months to come, and in the opinion of officials of the Fox corporation will undoubtedly tract even wider attention than "A Daughter of the Gods."

In offering the first Kellerman picture now, the corporation believes there is a splendid opportunity not only for those who have never played it but also for those theatres which have made big money to clean up again on a repeat booking. Kellerman is the wonderful production and the great publicity campaign soon to be projected in connection with "Queen of the Seven Seas". The Fox officials argue that both Kellerman pictures will prove moneymakers for the theatres that show them now.

CoastLikes O. Henry

Continued evidence of the popularity of the O. Henry stories is found in the fact that Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles has signed a contract with General Film to screen the O. Henry stories as rapidly as they can be released. Initial showings of these subjects in the Rialto won instant favor.

For several months the O. Henry stories have been seen on two continuous at the Rialto theatre in San Francisco, where they have obtained unusually fine collections. The Wolfville Tales, which are released alternately with the O. Henry stories, also are becoming regular features on the Rialto program, and are proving a hit.

Mae Murray Making "ScarletStrain."

Mae Elliott was formerly leading man with the Stamey Bros. and recently supported Theda Bara.

Selig Tells How "Hoosier Romance" Came to be Filmed

WILLIAM N. SELIG, a pioneer of the film industry and one of the best known of the world's motion picture producers, who is responsible for the happy thought that resulted in dramatization of J. Whitcomb Riley's "Hoosier Romance," soon to be released by Mutual, tells most interestingly in an interview how he secured the picture rights to the poem.

"Of course Mr. Riley and I were old friends," said Colonel Selig, "I knew him for twenty years—from the time he wrote verses for little weekly papers round Greenfield, Ind., to the time when managers were fighting for his services on the lecture platform.

"I always considered 'A Hoosier Romance' his masterpiece. Riley didn't agree with me. I talked it over with him a number of times before either of us had any idea about picturizing the poem. Riley was really his own harshest critic. He found faults with his poems that nobody else discovered. He pointed these out to me, but they were technical. I told Riley I didn't think he ought to bother about technique. He was a poet of the people, from the people and for the people, and the charm of his work lay in its simplicity.

"It was after Mr. Riley had become famous and quite rich—when he was a partner of Bobbs-Merrill & Co., of Indianapolis—that I went down to see him about picturing 'A Hoosier Romance.'

"Riley was dubious. He said he didn't see how the thing could be done. His idea was that the poem told too simple a story to permit its amplification for a five-reeler. I laughed. What I knew was that the poem contained the whole story of human life and love and motive. At the time of this talk Mr. Riley was ill and, in fact, he died before the picture was ready to show—a circumstance I profoundly regret. However, all the poet's surviving relatives have seen the picture a dozen times and they are delighted with it.

"Who's going to play old Jeff Thompson?" asked Riley, as we talked the matter over.

"Well," I said, 'some corking good actor that has the necessary qualifications. Don't know right now who I'll get, but anyway he'll be the man for the job.'

"'Hm,' mused Riley, 'he'll have to be an Indian actor, wouldn't he, or the atmosphere would be lost?'

"'You leave that part to me,' I told him. 'I love the poem and I'm going to see to it that it gets the best there is in pictorial presentation. If you don't like the picture when its done we'll throw it away.'

"Then Riley smiled—that old-time smile of his, and got up out of the chair he was lounging in with one leg over the arm—a characteristic attitude when he was at ease.

"'Colonel,' he said, 'if you put in your best licks on that story I know it'll be a darned good story pictorially. I can't see it in picture myself, but you go as far as you like and I'm glad to have it in the hands of a man I know and who knows me.'

"'I'll tell you the reason I was set on picturing 'A Hoosier Romance,'" I have traveled a good deal and I know that what decent people think in a New York flat with a kitchenette and a creaky elevator is the same sort of thing that decent people think who live in Indiana or in the Australian bush or on the South African veldt or in the shires of England. Human nature is a whole lot alike. I know that Riley's poems were being read quite as keen an appreciation in Gloucestershire and Warwickshire and in the counties of Scotland and among the fisher-folk of the Channel Islands as they were in the United States. Riley has become an international. He was a citizen of the world.

"I picked Thomas Jefferson for the old farmer part and Colleen Moore for the lead. Jefferson is a great actor, and if Riley could see him pull that Indian stuff of the straw between his lips at the fiddler I'm sure he'd indorse the selection.'

Ebones Reported to be Gaining Recent bookings of Ebony comedies have increased at its exchange, it is stated by General Film Company; which is distributing these releases. The humor of the colored players is described as catching. "When You're Scared, Run!" It has to do with the mishaps of a droll character who wanders into a prize fighter's training camp.

Exhibitors Who Booked Big Six Report Big Business

The William Fox Big Six of 1918 continue to prove profitable for the exhibitors who booked them. It is shown by telegrams from exhibitors all over the country received by the Fox Film Corporation. In practically every case where theatres took the Big Six—"A Fool There Was," "The Two Orphans," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Bondman," "A Soldier's Oath" and "The Plunderer"—capacity business was the rule.

W. A. McCarty, manager of the Princess theatre, Oil City, Pa., has telegraphed the following: "Have just finished playing 'A Fool There Was' and 'The Bondman' at advanced prices to the biggest business of any week so far this summer. The public remember the good ones."

John Hemrick, the Little theatre, Seattle, declared: "Placed 'A Fool There Was' to capacity business, this in spite of extremely hot weather and unusually keen competition."

From George Zeper, Rex theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., came this wire: "ran William Farnum in 'The Bondman' and it certainly did pull like the name—big."

Martin R. Tooney, manager of the Emery theatre, one of the principal motion picture houses in Providence, stated: "On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week I played Theda Bara in 'A Fool There Was' to sell-out business. 'I also just signed first run for Providence 'Cecelia' and 'Les Miserables.'"

"The biggest three days' business we have had in eight weeks," is the report of W. Ledoux, president of the Empress theatre Co. of Omaha, on the showing of Theda Bara in "A Fool There Was."

Pathe's July 4 Parade

Going Strong All Over

Following upon the very successful showing at the Rialto theatre, New York, during the week of the 4th, Pathe announces that "The Fourth of July in France" is being extensively booked in all the various branches.

The San Francisco office has been particularly active in placing this timely and patriotic two-reel picture. It reports being closed with the New Movies theatre in San Francisco for the full week of August 11. Other important bookings with the Turner & Dabkson theatre in Oakland and with well-known houses in Reno, Sacramento, San Jose, Berkeley, Stockton, Richmond, Watsonville and Fresno also have been reported.

Observers who saw the screening at the Rialto report large audiences and much enthusiasm.

It is said at the Pathe office that a record business for a two-reel picture is confidently expected and that the business now on the books justifies the optimism. The picture was obtained from the French Pictorial Service and was photographed by the cinematographic division of the French army.

Get Run for Your Money

In This Metro Production

The Saratoga Special, in which Hans Niall, a two-year-old chestnut, won $9,000 and a gold loving cup valued at $19,000 for his owner, Edith Hamilton, of Hale Hamilton's first Metro starring vehicle, "Five Thousand an Hour," by George Randolph Chester, six races in all will be viewed by those who see the Metro picture when it is released, including besides the Saratoga Special, the North American Steeplechase and the Champlain Handicap.

Cameras were William Black and Eugene Gaudio were taken to Saratoga by Director Ralph Ince. "Shots" of the grand stand, the club house, the score boards, the weighing in and out of the jockeys, the bugler, the starter, and trainer McNaughton were obtained, as well as the actual races themselves.

During the Steeplechase, one of the jockeys fell from his horse directly in front of the camera operated by Black, the horse romping home alone. That 'nag horse was disqualified does not detract one wit from the interest of the "shot" to spectators of the screen play, as Black had the presence of mind to keep turning the crank and obtain all the "action."

The races form a vital part of the story in "Five Thousand an Hour," which has been seminorized by Junc Mathis from the Chestor story.

Small Cast Supports Miss Barriscale

Rogers Barriscale's next Paralta Play, "The White Lie," is a powerful drama written by William Parker and directed by Howard Hickman. The gripping situation is built around three characters, who, outside of baby Mary Jane Irving, are practically the only persons in the story. With the star, Charles Gunn and Edward Coxon make up the cast. Originally called "A Wife's Conscience," "The White Lie" will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on September 2.

"Bonnie Annie Laurie" is Ready for Release

Peggy Hyland, in "Bonnie Annie Laurie," a Scottish tale of patriotism and love, is announced by the Fox corporation as the first release under the new brand of Excel Pictures. Lillian Walker Picture

THAT Lester Park, president of the Lillian Walker Pictures Corporation, has lived up to his promise to give exhibitors a start-up picture is said to have been demonstrated at a private showing of the first of these productions, "The Embarrassment of Kilcher," held at the Thanbough studios in New Rochelle last week.

Edward Dillon, the director of the picture, and Roy Somerville, who picturized this former Broadway success of Louis Angespuke's, are said to have succeeded in blending that rarest of combinations in a picture—pleasant and exciting action, with a delightful love story in many respects. As the novel is well written, the production is the type that will multiply the fame of Miss Walker and her company.

The love story around which the picture is built is of that quality which leaves a good taste in the spectator. Its moral, that money does not always make for happiness, is developed in amusing fashion.

Cari Brickert, who has just completed a long engagement on Broadway as the stoker on a tramp steamer, is Walker's leading man. Mr. Brickert is practically a newcomer to the screen.

In addition to the pictures, which, in common with all the new Walker pictures, will be distributed through the W. H. Hodkinson Corporation, will be released September 25.

Big Reports from "Les Miserables."

The success established by "Les Miserables," the great film production made by Willa Universal, has been growing since it was put on an open rental basis Aug. 1, it is shown by reports being received daily by the Fox Film Corporation.

Not only are more cities booking this picture, but new requests for it are coming in from telephone operators. Philadelphia is a striking instance of the success which rebookings of "Les Miserables" have scored. In the Quaker City, the Victor Hugo picture had an initial engagement of two weeks at a first run house. These two weeks all house records were broken. But immediately after this run, Les Miserables was harried Philadelphia for eleven-week stands, capacity audiences being the rule at each house.

Two-Reeler for Marie Walcamp.

Marie Walcamp has brought upon her young self a prospect of big tasks and more of them by the success she attained in "The Lion's Claws." The immediate result is that the Universal has arranged to reunite this star as soon as possible in a two-reeler western drama, "The Whirlwind Finish." The Marie Walcamp has as many big chances for scoring in "The Whirlwind Finish" as she had in "The Lion's Claws," with a few additional obligations. The action is rapid and full of effective situations. The story is of the race-track of the west.

Marin Sais Plays Opposite Hayakawa.

Marin Sais is playing opposite Sessue Hayakawa in a production which is expected to be the third to be made by the Hahow Pictures Corporation for Mutual release. Miss Sais is replacing Miss Florence Vidor as the leading woman in the first of his new productions, "His Birthright," playing a hokum love theme in the same manner as she did in "The White Claws," with a few additional obligations. The action is rapid and full of effective situations. The story is of the race-track of the west.

Government Backs Metro's "Kaiser."

In accordance with a government order Screen Classics' "To Hell With the Kaiser" will be shown in all the munitions plants throughout the country. This is a tremendous tribute to the patriot-building powers of the big feature screen drama, which was first introduced at the Broadway theatre, New York, in a run of several weeks, and has since taken the entire country by storm.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" has also been recommended to be shown in Uncle Sam's theatres. It is a straightforward story of American soldiers of the brutality of the Hun. The picture has been officially recognized as leading the boys as and enthusiasm of the boys in khaki, making them realize their high privilege in being the defenders of democracy and world decency. A recommendation has come from the Intelligence Officer of Camp Jackson, S. C., to his commanding general suggesting that the subject be secured for all Liberty theatres.

Carmel Myers Back at Universal City.

Carmel Myers, who has just returned to Universal City after a month's vacation in the east, has managed with the aid of others to fulfill her promise made to thousands of soldiers in eastern camps. The young actress who plays Miss Myers in Philadelphia for eleven week stands, capacity audiences being the rule at each house.

Miss Myers is now working on a new Bluebird under the direction of Paul Pow- dell, a recent acquisition to the Bluebird directing staff. The picture is entitled "The Duchess of Dark Entry." It is adapted from a well known story by Perley Poore Sheehan, who was co-author with Robert Davis of "We Are French." Miss Myers' supporting cast includes Rosdolfo de Valentina, Alfred Allen, R. Cummings and Harold Goodwin.

Besides the Farnum picture, those being made in the west are "The She-Devil," which is being completed under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, and "The Two-Gun Man," which Tom Mix and his company are doing at Prescott, under the direction of Lynn Reynolds. Gladys Brockwell has just completed the pictures version of the famous stage play of the same name which was written by Wilbert J. Harbutt, and is being handled at the Eclair studio, Fort Lee, on "How Do You Get That Way?" a breezy, patriotic play. Director Richard Stanton has begun work on "Eyes of the Soul," an all-star production, and another company has started on a big picture. Peggy Hy- land is progressing rapidly toward the completion of "Marriages Are Made," and Jane and Katherine Lee, under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom, are at work at the Victor studio on "Go Get Em." Other projects have yet to be announced.

Exceptional Pulling Power Sought by Goldwyn Posters

GOLDWYN has provided twenty-four sheets of exceptional pulling power for the first six productions under the company's new Star Series booking plan. Special attention has been given "star personality" and the new twenty-four sheets are arranged with a large and striking head of the star at the left end of each stand. Plain, striking lettering is used and it is of such mammoth size that the title of the picture and name of its star may be seen and read blocks away. Large portraits of the star fill the entire end of the stand and at the right end of each stand there is a frame to hold a six-sheet of the production. This six-sheet is the regular six of the production paper, to be inserted. Beautiful color schemes add to the effectiveness of the stands and the general combination is one that cannot help attract attention and admiration.

Goldwyn always has regarded its advertising paper as one of the most essential factors toward box-office success. In the last year exhibitors have commented on the class and quality of Goldwyn stands. With the adoption of the new Star Series policy the company determined to give its customers paper that would fully measure up to the high quality of the pictures themselves.

Goldwyn exchanges are now supplied with the new twenty-four-sheets and Goldwyn has extended a special invitation to exhibitors to call at the various branches and inspect this individualized paper. Some who already have seen it declare it is the most striking and beautiful in the market.

Bridegrooms Get Mixed in L-KO.

There is an interesting scene of bridegroom mixing in "Her Whirlwind Wedding," the L-KO comedy released by Universal September 4. It's as much as the eyes can do to keep up with the action as the two men who save the same girl are switched back and forth in the wedding scene.

The cast is made up of Hob Mackenroth as the farmer; Chester Ryckman, his "dedicated" son; Porter Strong as Hector Hoot; Harry Lorraine as Mr. Succotash, and Eva Novak as Sally Succotash.

"The Hun Within" and First Paramount-Arcaft Special

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release early in September the big Paramount-Arcaft special entitled, "The Hun Within," a playphot of unusual excellence presenting such popular screen players as Dorothy Gish, George Fawcett, Douglas MacLean and others. Daily revelations in the newspapers of the country of the subtle influences of German propaganda and the effect of enemy work within our own borders which is being exposed by the Secret Service Department is the subject of this production.

The production has been carefully guarded for months in California, great secrecy was thrown around the cast and no information concerning it has appeared anywhere. It was staged under the direction of Chet Withey.

The story tells of a young American boy who returns to his country after an education in Germany, where the influences of autocracy have completely unbalanced him. He falls an easy prey to the machinations of German agents in America and plots with them against his own country despite the protestations of his father, who is German born but who is loyal to the Stars and Stripes.

Dorothy Gish has a splendid role. George Fawcett plays the part of the old German-American who is loyal to the United States.

The subject is the first of the nine big Paramount-Arcaft Specials to be released during the coming year starting September 1.

Tourneur a Firm Believer

In Element of Surprise

MAURICE TOURNER, whose first independent production, "Sporting Life," will be released early in September through Hillier & Wilk, Inc., has a profound belief in the element of surprise as a factor in film success.

"Let audiences come to the theatre expectant, give them everything they expect—and a whole lot more," is Mr. Tourneur's axiom of success. "I am applying this idea to my first independent production, 'Sporting Life.' This Drury Lane melodrama, a remainder of the turf, revolving around the annual British sporting classic, the Derby. All our press material must convince the patrons of themselves with these essential facts. I do not believe in telling the whole screen story by incident by success. The whole man is surprised."

Will Be "Ruling Passions"

Other pictures show how the United States has made certain a suitable supply of castor oil for airplane motors; the new dental car for army use; the making of toys for crippled French soldiers; how the Red Cross is salvaging waste material; and the launching of the "U.N.C.I.N.C.E.," in the record-breaking time of twenty-four days after the keel was laid.

Hoffman, and Co. It is starred in the production. Details as to the theme have not yet been divulged but it is known that the story is an international surprise. While it is a war-time drama, there are no battle scenes. The story is about love, patriotism, human machinations against this country, and other interesting elements that make up a swiftly moving drama of 1918. In speaking of this production, which is being made at the Hospital for the Insane in New York, Mr. Lesser says: "I consider this the best picture I have ever handled, and believe both the title and story are a great drawing power. Suspicion is widespread just now. We are all more or less under suspicion, and because of this picture, it is up to us in these times to show that we are above suspicion, that we are loyal in heart and mind and soul.

Buffalo Citizens Awake to Patriotic Appeals

Lafayette Square Becomes Scene of Recruiting Drives for Marines and Sale of War Savings Stamps in Which Picture Interests Play Important Part.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 216 Carolina street, Buffalo, N. Y. Telephone, Tupper 1276-J.

Big Boost for W. S. S.

A PATRIOTIC rally to help the sale of W. S. Stamps was held at Lafayette Square, Buffalo, recently under the auspices of Local No. 239 of the Moving Picture Operators' Union of Buffalo. The arrangements were made by D. L. Martin representing that organization. There was music and speeches, the entire programme being of a patriotic nature. The film shown included those taken at the time when Glen Gaskill of this city made a speech from a horse cage at a similar rally at the same location. City Councilman Malone had arranged for the erection of a suitable platform for the moving picture men. The lights in the vicinity of the square were dimmed so the pictures could be seen. Many thrif and war saving stamps were sold.

"The Unbeliever" Wins Recruits.

The U. S. Marines recruiting drive, in which the George F. Beahm Production of "The Unbeliever" played a prominent part, closed yesterday effectively and was a marked success from every viewpoint. Sergt. Robert C. Graham, who delivered several lectures in connection with "The Unbeliever," was the promoter of the campaign. In connection with the event he "planted" several columns of good copy in the local and nearby newspapers. Nearly 1200 recruits were secured. The rallies were held at Lafayette Square, where "Col." Lillian Russell and Fay Templeton, famous stage stars, sang and spoke in a patriotic strain and aroused the enthusiasm of their audiences to the highest pitch. Newspapers have been persuaded and assisted by Sergt. Graham in getting out different marine corps sections in this district.

Booking Keystone Reissues

Manager Montgomery of the Triangle, Buffalo, reports that sixteen Keystone reissues, the majority featuring Mabel Normand and Patty Arbuckle, are being booked rapidly in many of the best houses in this territory. The reissues are two, three, and four days.

E. O. Weinberg, Patriot

E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Elmwood moving picture theatre, Buffalo, is devoting considerable time to the booking of the "The Unbeliever," and is delivering patiotic messages to his audiences. This week he is using the familiar cutout cartoons, which are very effective. He is also booking a Hun opponent into the Rhine.

Mr. Weinberg's caption for the drawing is: "Keep the spearpoint of the Great White Front sharp. Food will do it. Eat less. Send more across."

Buffalo Picture Men Loom Large

Edward L. Hyman, who has been appointed head of the moving picture division for all the Liberty theatres throughout the State of New York, recently visited his home in Buffalo. He was the manager of the Victory moving picture theatre for many years, and has always been a leader in its work in the camps and is particularly observant of the wonderful effect that proper amusement has upon the minds and morals of the men.

Mr. Hyman is assisted by Matt Whitman, former manager of the Allendale moving picture theatre in this city. Whitman is stationed at Atlanta, Ga., and is known as the southeastern representative of the picture. His headquarters are at 1529 Broadway, New York City. The booth has been moved to Washington four months ago as a member of a quartermaster's reserve corps.

He enlisted as manager of a Liberty theatre, being placed in charge of one of the Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga. He later was transferred to the government's large theatre at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga. His duties there included the selection of moving picture programmes for nine other southeastern camps. This promotion was followed, after three weeks, by his latest appointment.

Faithfully Observing "Lightless."

Buffalo exhibitors are closely observing the recent ring of the bell for the "Lightless." Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evening of each week. Shortly after the order was first issued it was found that some of the local moving picture theatres have a few canopy or door lights outside. Several proprietors were duly warned by Howard A. Foreman, Erie County fuel administrator, and thereafter they were compelled to ceasing. The staff of the local fuel office is not large enough to make a thorough inspection of the theatres at other places of business each night and is therefore aided in this work by members of the police department.

Folding the Speculators

Dr. F. C. Cornell, manager of the Majestic theatre, Buffalo, which showed "Hearts of the World," gave out the following "Open letter to the people of Buffalo" shortly before the opening date of that attraction:

"As ticket speculators have already started their work of sending messengers to the box office of the Majestic, it has become necessary to establish a rule that not more than six tickets will be sold to each person. The name of the person will be on the tickets. If you are not the person we will not sell the tickets."

"D. W. Griffith, producer of the 'Hearts of the World,' has telegraphed from Los Angeles, California, saying that this ruling he made in New York for justice to all patrons who wish to see the picture in this theatre, and this ruling he will make to all theatres in this city."

"Due to the heat the film attracted crowded houses at every performance."

Theatre Has Local "Weekly."

Through an arrangement between the Strand moving picture theatre, Buffalo, and the Evening News of this city all events of local interest will be shown in pictures on the Strand screen. The service will be called the News-Strand Local Weekly. The city service showed the recent rescue of James H. Harris and Gustave Loberry near the brink of Niagara Falls in a moving picture camera car on the scene at the Falls shortly after news of the breaking away of the scow, on which they were the two men, reached Buffalo. The views included the scow and rescuers on the rocks above the falls, the rapids and the cartoon cars.

Canadian Showmen Doing Big Things in Big Way With Feature Promotion and Profiting Accordingly—All Set for Annual Toronto Exposition.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Mineva Avenue, Tor onto, Can.

Prepare for Gala Event.

TORONTO exhibitors, large and small, have once more arranged to put on a show for the annual Canadian National Exhibition, which is to be held in Toronto this year from August 26 to September 5. Local theatre managers yearly cater to the thousands of out-of-town visitors who take in Canada's large exposition by hook or special productions and adding extra attractions. The two weeks of the annual fair are invariably two of the best weeks of the whole twelve months. Incidentally, the big local event is used by exhibitors as the opening period for the fall and winter season at their houses. New policies are advertised and frequently new brands of pictures are shown for the first time.

The Regent theatre, Toronto, is already inviting visitors from outside centres to attend special shows in its comfortable and commodious theatre and suggests to local hostesses that an enjoyable few hours may be spent at the Regent with guests.

Manager Roland Roberts of the Regent has announced that his special attraction for the first week of the Canadian National Exhibition will be the first of a series of Screen Classics, "To Hell with the Kaiser." This feature will probably be shown during the second week also.

Jules and J. J. Allen have announced to present "Hearts of the World" in Massey Hall, the large local auditorium, during the two weeks of the fair. After the picture has played at the Allen theatre for four weeks, it will be offered to the Canadian public in a form that resembles a normal policy with the opening of the Exposition.

The owner of the Strand theatre is also making special preparations to draw and handle large crowds during the fair weeks.

Cohen Again Opens Exchange.

Arthur Cohen, proprietor of the Globe and U-Kum theatres, Toronto, has arranged to re-enter the film exchange business in Toronto. Mr. Cohen was formerly active with Globe Films, Limited, and is now expanding a series of Comedies and a number of State Right features in Canada. Paralta releases were distributed during the last year by Regal Films, Limited, although Mr. Cohen retained control of the Paralta franchise. This arrangement has been discontinued and Mr. Cohen is resuming active interest in the exchange field.

Among the special attractions which Mr. Cohen has controlled in Canada are "The Warrior," "Lust of the Ages," "The Spoilers," "Redemption," "Birth," etc.

Griffith Feature in Demand.

"Hearts of the World" will be the opening attraction in at least three of the new policy of five-star theatres, the other two being controlled by Jules and J. J. Allen of Toronto. The Allens have secured six pictures for Canada for the next two weeks in reserve for emergency or future use.

One print now is being used in a six-weeks run in the Allen theatre, Toronto, and Massey Hall, Toronto. A second print will be used for the opening of the new Allen theatre in Westmount, Quebec, on September 16. A third will be shown as the opening feature for the new Allen theatre in Edmonton, Alberta, and the fourth print will be started at the new Allen theatre in Regina, Saskatchewan. The houses at Edmonton and Regina are scheduled to open in September.

According to an announcement, "Hearts of the World" will be presented at each of the new Allen theatres at advanced prices, evening prices ranging up to $1.50. The runs at the various houses will be for two weeks at least. The Temple theatre, Hamilton, and the Majestic theatre, London, will have the Toronto print of the picture after the Toronto engagement. The exhibition in Regina, the Allen Regent theatre, Ottawa, will get the Montreal print. The Allens have twenty-one theatres in Canada and each of these houses will get the picture for an extended engagement before the feature is really placed "on the road."

Fine Point on Reserving Seats.

At the end of the second week's run at the Allen theatre, Toronto, Jules Allen admitted that a mistake had been made in reserving all seats of the theatre for every performance. It is pointed out that many people who could afford the best seats were reserving the cheaper seats in advance and patrons of moderate means were compelled at the last minute to pay more for their show in order to see the production. In view of this condition, the Allens decided to place 400 seats of the cheaper prices on sale immediately before each performance.

"This detail is one big thing that we have learned," admitted Mr. Allen, "and I do not mind telling other exhibitors about it."

Giving Wounded a Treat.

One of the policy-making five-star officials, managers and employees of Jules and J. J. Allen in Toronto, went holidaying to the Laurentian Mountains on August 11, for the purpose of entertaining several hundred convalescing warriors in the Ambulance Corps. The large party made the trip in a cavalcade of automobiles and later in the day the thirty motor cars were used to take a large number of the returned heroes for a trip into the country.

One of the features of the programme was the presentation of "Hearts of the World" in the new and commodious moving picture auditorium of the Whistler Military Hospital. Musical accompaniment was played by the entire Allen theatre orchestra of thirty players. The motor cars were used to take the convalescents to the big picture at the hospital theatre was Mr. Barber, a returned soldier, who had been a prominent exhibitor for patients. Mr. Barber took a course in struction in moving picture projection under the auspices of the Canadian Soldiers' Re-Education Commission and served in one of the Canadian hospitals in France. Mr. Barber, after which he became operator at the Whistler Hospital theatre. The exhibition produced aroused intense interest.

During the afternoon the Allen Theatre Baseball Team played a ball game with the Hospital Nine and nosed out a 15 to 9 victory in the eleventh inning. The soldiers fared badly with the bat, the Allens out of 100 players weakened, the film flattened, the ball hopped into the second baseman and eluded out a three-bagger and the game became tied. Green is the publicity man on the Allen team.

During the evening the soldiers were also entertained by the rendering of several songs by the Bohemian Hill of the Allen theatre orchestra scoring a distinct hit with several violin specialties. Mr. Stein also gave a pleasing vocal selection.

An interesting episode occurred when Major Archibald presented Messrs. Bar, Jules and J. J. Allen with a silver shield in behalf of the hospital patients in recognition of their importance in the hospital's activities, which have been extended to the institution by the Allens during past months.

The Famous Players Film Service, Limited, Toronto, has donated the use of many " Günther " prints and entertainment of the convalescent soldiers.

William Cranston Joins the Allens.

William Cranston of Toronto, until recently with the Canadian National Film Corporation, has become associated with Jules and J. J. Allen for the purpose of handling important details in connection with the production of "Hearts of the World". In the many Allen theatres in Canada the Allens have formerly held the Canadian rights for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," which were recently released by Allen. Mr. Cranston will also attend to details in connection with the releasing of the feature.

Interesting News "Shorts."

Three prints each of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" have been in the hands of Jules and J. J. Allen for release in Canada and starting in September these productions will be offered to the public. Booking will be restricted to exhibitors who will charge a minimum admission of five cents. "The Birth of a Nation" has already been presented in many theatres and its play shows under the management of William Cranston.

"Cheating the Public," the Fox release, has been condemned by the Manitoba Board of Censors, according to an announcement by the Bijou theatre, Winnipeg, which had advertised the picture extensively as a coming attraction. The feature has already been shown in Ontario, British Columbia and elsewhere in the Dominion.

Charles L. Stevens, general manager of Stevens Bros. department stores, Montreal and other cities, has acquired the Canadian rights for "The Still Alarm." Mr. Stevens will announce this feature during a recent visit in New York City.

M. I. Brown and D. Cooper, who are associated with the Sunshine Motion Picture Company, have secured "Nine Tenths of the Law," for Canada. This feature will be released through Sunshine.

"The Scorching Flame," a local five reel photoplay taken for the Montreal Fire Society, is now being distributed by the Canadian Film Import, Limited, made such a hit at the Theatre Francois during the past week in Montreal that it has been played during the week of August 5. The picture replaced the annual amateur benefit performance and the re-earned made a lot of money out of the venture.

By J. L. Ray, Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

Wassman, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, and the Jacobs, former the executive council of the National Defense Braved chances of a "cyc- lone" and interference at the hands of the Federal authorities. As the Manager of the Knickerbocker, who has flatly put his foot down on Sunday "movies," and on last Sunday afternoon, the show went on with a fan- tastic absence at the Knickerbocker for the benefit of the Soldiers' Wool Fund, which is be- ing raised in behalf of the Women's Com- mittee of National Defense, Women's Division.

While the performance was widely adver- tised and largely attended, there was no interference from the rampant mayor, police or other authorities, doubtless due to the initial issue of "700 Hickory" the day before yesterday. The result is, that the show was given with a purity of purpose that has been far more rare since the war work of the most urgent nature.

The feature film shown was "Navy Life" and "theatrical" was "to procure the billboard. Fredric Walcott, U. S. Theatre Has New House Magazine.
A NEW program, or miniature movie magazine, as the publisher terms it, has made its appearance at the California theatre, its organization, its program and moving picture stars in general. It contains such interesting departures from the usual organization as appearing as those of the present time. Singing has proved especially popular in the theatre, especially those who form the young folk, are known for their performances.

Theatre Commission.
For the present time, journalists are pouring in at a consistent rate. In this theatre, the all-day singing by the young folks is particularly well known for its ability. The problem of the audience for the purpose of presenting a letter that has a bearing on the postmarked point that it will be a failure.

United States Circuit Judge W. H. Hunt has handed down a decision awarding Almanach a New York, and Bohemian theatre, $350, instead of $7,000, in her suit against Turner & Dahlen for infringement of copyright. W. H. Hunt placed the value of the song at eight cents a copy instead of a dollar each as was the decision of the lower court.

Prisoners See “Hearts of the World.”
The inmates of San Quentin prison, through the courtesy of theatre owners, were treated to a presentation of “Hearts of the World” on the morning of August 4, and its strong patriotic appeal made a wonderful impression on the prisoners. Following the performance visiting exhibitors, managers and machine operators were the guests of Warden James A. Johnston at luncheon. The film was then returned to the theatre for its afternoon presentation, when it began the seventh week of its engagement.

Screen Stars.
Margaret Fisher, the star of the American Film Company, led the grand march at the screen stars' ball, which was held at National Hall, Sixteenth and Mission streets, on the evening of August 10. A number of other moving picture stars were in attendance and local residents turned out en masse. As a prize to the belting fox trotter a silver cup was donated, bearing the signatures of the principal stars and autographed photograph of William Far- num was presented. There was a little incident with the Red Cross. The major portion of the receipts are to be turned over to the Red Cross and to the California Committee for Relief in Belgium and France.

Personals and News Briefs.
Douglas H. Bergh, personal representa- tive of George Kleine, has just returned from a trip to southern California and will shortly leave for Denver.

Fred McClenan, formerly manager of “Hearts of the World” for the Pacific Coast, left for Chicago, where he will take charge of the sales and production of the big Griffith play for the territory west of the Mississippi.

H. J. Werner, president of the American Photo Players Company, is wandering in the Midwest in the hope of the arrival of a young son at his home.

GERARDINE “My Four Years in Ger- many” was booked at the Crescent theatre by J. J. Hartjove, the manager, for two days, beginning August 12. In conjunction with the show was the new thirty-piece band from St. Mary’s Industrial school and the orchestra, the section with the Kaiser in the cage such as was used and originated by L. A. hebert, which opened the picture on the first day. On August 19 and 20 Mr. Hartjove planned to run “Tarzan of the Apes,” and “The Black Cat.” The model shubbery to represent a jungle. He also plans to have boys dressed as monkeys in the cage, as they do in German films.

Two Griffith Pictures.
Charles K. and John T. Ford, co-pro- prietors of Ford’s opera house, booked Griffith’s two pictures, “Birth of a Nation,” for one week beginning Wednesday, August 11. While this Griffith production was shown briefly in other theatres throughout the United States, the picture was shown at the Crescent Wednesday night, under examination of the assembled managers. The pictures have been framed for consideration of the mechanics. They were not made public.

It is also said that musicians in orchestras have taken the same course for the purpose that the managers had offered them 25 per cent.

John Leicht, who formerly managed the Teddy Bear theatre, is now said to be doing his bid for Uncle Sam in a ship- building port. His brother, who is managing the Baltimore Dry Docks and Shipbuilding Company, is understood to be working for the government. His brother Leicht is pulling down $100 per week.

Baltimore Personal.
Jack Levine, formerly co-proprietor of the Little Pickwick theatre with his brother Irvine Levine, is now said to be managing the First Avenue theatre in New York.

The affairs of the Mutual Film Company for the Baltimore and Maryland ter- ritory are now being run by Mr. Price, Jr., who will act as their representative here. Mr. Price is formerly associated with Dr. Kay, as their Balti- more representative. He is very affable and courteous and will prove a valuable addition to Mutual force.

The Vitagraph Company is now being represented in Baltimore and Maryland by Mr. Price, who is in charge of the office in Baltimore, and whose work is sound and efficient. The recent (1918) decision of the Maryland commission, who until recently has been in the Vir- ginia commission, has been an excellent move for the company. Mr. Buck is well known in Washington and Philadelphia, having been associated with both bodies for many years and with the company, the city and Select, Kleine and Hoffman Foursquare in the latter city.

Canada “Sarional” Specialties.
There has been quite an interesting sit- uation in St. John regarding the coming to the city of the Chautauqua. As we under- stand it, a group of people from the Northern Territorial is purely educational and asked tax exemption on those grounds. Out of the twenty-five percent, thirteen were of the concert or opera nature and therefore it was regarded as conflicting with the regular theatres in the city.

Theatre Man Wide Awake.
The war tax was enforced and the regular time of the theatre is one hour past the city. W. H. Golding wrote two letters to the press and the superintendent of the Chautauqua answered publicly from the platform stating that Chautauqua has never charged the “movies” but did not try to hide the fact that their sales of books and tests (educational and art) has educational and ranks with schools, colleges and churches.

It is believed that the manager of the Imperial should not protest against an outside concern being patronized by St. John people as his own theatre was run by an American firm. Mr. Golding in answer to this showed that the care of the city, which had a large payroll, pays all the taxes and employes make a little money. Un- doubtedly his letters had an effect upon the people of St. John as the show has been in the centre of almost every patriotic effort.

Nathan Looking Around.
A. Nathan of the Universal Film Com- pany was a visitor in St. John last week. He is a very wide awake man, and is making changes in the Holman theatre of that city and while in St. John spent much of his time conferring with G. A. Golding, manager of the Canadian Universal.

"HER ONLY WAY"
Norma Talmadge's Latest Select Picture is Dramatic and Intriguing.
Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GEORGE SCARBOROUGH is the author of "Her Only Way," a Select picture directed by Sidney Franklin, scenario by Mary Murillo. Norma Talmadge has the leading role. The story belongs to the ancient and honorable order of dream pictures. They have always been a large and enthusiastic following, and "Her Only Way" is a worthy example of its class. It also has the very great advantage of Norma Talmadge's sincere acting. The story possesses a little that is new, but with the aid of the dream device it has several effective dramatic scenes, and the happy ending which follows the heroine's awakening is like the sunshine after the storm.

The part played by Norma Talmadge is called Luella Westbrooks, a young girl reared in wealth and refinement, who is told by her guardian that her father left her a fortune. She has been living with her mother, a man who has run away. Luella is available. She is also courted by Paul Belmont, who is weak morally but has a large bank account. Influenced by her desire to save the property and her pique at a remark made by Marshall, the heroine decides to accept Belmont. While she is waiting for him to come for her answer she falls asleep and dreams she has become his wife. The experience is so unpleasant that she wakes up in terror of the man and gives him a cold reception. Marshall is compromised with Marshall and his husband forces her into the divorce court. False witnesses swore away her reputation and Luella follows her husband and kills him by a shot from a revolver. At a point in the story, Luella is so relieved to find that she has not made a mistake of marrying Belmont she settles the matter forever by accepting Marshall when he comes back to apologize for his remark.

Eugene O'Brien is a manly and earnest Joseph Marshall and Ramsey Wallace gives a finished impersonation of Paul Belmont. Alice Western and Joynia Howland are excellent representatives of Judge Dates and Mrs. Randolph. The cameramen are Albert Moses and Ed Weymann.

"THE LOVE SWINDLE"

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

The average audience will be pleased with "The Love Swindle," a five-part Bluebird production based on a story by Rex Taylor. It features Edith Roberts and was directed by Jack Dillon. The plot is extremely well worked out and its details have been presented with complete realism. Fred Myton seems to have made a successful directorial debut, and the dramatic moments of the story are well sustained. Others of the cast are Emmanuella Turner, Leo White, Reggie Morris and Clarissa Selwynne.

The story pivots about the desire of a rich young woman to escape from the uninteresting men of her set and marry a real man who will love her for herself and not for her money. By accident she meets an automobile agent, a young man of strong physique and character and falls in love with him. He runs away with her, however, because of their difference in station, also having qualms concerning her evident chỉreté on cocktail proclivities. To win her point she tells him she has a twin sister and asks him to deliver a message to her, which he does at the appointed hour, when she herself demurely dressed is on the spot with the twin sister, and is not aware until after the marriage takes place that he has married a rich girl.

EVER since Rider Haggard wrote "She," the beautiful heroine clad in scanty hunting costume has been a favorite character with the African jungle and casts her spell over a handsome young explorer. has been a favorite character with the African jungle and casts her spell over a handsome young explorer. In "The Savage Woman," the French novelist, wrote a story called "La Fille Sauvage," which furnished the groundwork for the Select picture, "The Savage Woman," in which Clara Kimball Young, at the head of her own company, acts the part of Renee Benoit, the daughter of a drunken African trader, who has been allowed to grow up as wild and uncivilized as one of the natives of the land. The scenario was made by Kathryn Stuart and the production directed by Edmund Mortimer.

The pictorial features of the photoplay are many, and the romance wanders along in the heart of the jungle, and one that belongs to tales of this sort. A little more skill in putting the picture together and bringing it into dramatic possibilities would have improved it considerably. The action of the five reels covers a great deal of ground, and there is no really big scene in the picture. The novelty of seeing Clara Kimball Young dressed in a leopardskin and several stringers of glass beads and running barefooted through the jungle after the manner of "Tarzan of the Apes," also of the Keaton type of stunt work and the production shows care and good judgment.

The picture is happy and entertaining, playing with the monkeys in the jungle, until Jean Leter, a French explorer who has been treated badly by a beautiful woman of the Paris underworld, takes her to France... and introduces her to smart gowns and the ways of Bohemian society. The girl, now known as Jean, is tricked into leaving the tribe by her still untamed nature to return to Africa and resume her old manner of living.

The story of MacDonald and the theft dragged him through his life as he is about to be sacrificed by the natives. She is taken for the reformation of the Queen of Beba and the tribe are afraid to disobey her. Lorier has treated her but lightly before, but he now realizes her well enough to make her his wife.

Clara Kimball Young acts the young savage and is excellently supported by Milton Slates as Jean, Marcia Manon as Aimee Ducharme, and Clyde Bennett as Alfred, while Arthur Edison was the photographer.

The five-part Bluebird release for August 24, "Fires of Youth," is entertaining in that it gives us a new look for the moving picture the highest praise of the year. Instead of casting, there is considerable entertainment to be gained from it. The cast is a small one, consisting of but three principal characters—the feminine lead, Ruth Clifford; Ralph Lewis and George Fisher.

The story tells of a young girl who became entangled in an affair with the son of the storekeeper, and wisely but well, and awakened too late to the fact that she had been used for a playing. The picture spares the spectator that part of the story which deals with the death of the girl's child by suicide, but does show her taking life itself with showing her becoming an inmate of the home of a friend, who shelters her and who teaches music and again meeting a lawyer who has loved her in her shop-girl days, and tries to persuade her to marry him, finally winning her acceptance.

The strongest melodramatic thrill of the story happens when the villain re-enters the scene and is about to elope with the lawyer's sister. In the course of the scenes which follow he is shot, and the story of his ill-doing and the girl's past is revealed.

"HEART OF THE WILDS," August 30—A splendid five-reel adaptation of Augustus Thomas' famous stage page, with Elsie Ferguson in the leading role, assisted by a strong cast. The screen version begins quietly but works up to a laughable climax and in some respects excels the original. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

"THE GREAT LOVE," Artcraft—The latest D. W. Griffith production is a war story told in about six reels. Cast, production and story make it a fine picture. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Increase your newspaper space and name the star in big type, but always make it plain that there is a story as well as a star. Use the publicity plan for a slogan. If you cannot get hold of a roulette wheel you can make one with red and black segments "Death" and the red "Life and Happiness." Mount it below a pointer so that the public can see it in a dividing line, and below ask, "What did the turn of the wheel bring Geraldine Farrar?"

The operations are being conducted by James Herrick, the president of the road, and Clayton, the road's attorney, who is engaged to Herrick's niece, Janet, who Kirk rescued as his yachting came into port. Neal takes Kirk to a "filthy" college, where he learns to crack safe keys, and he goes to Herrick's to look into the safe there. Janet is involved, and Kirk abducts her. Neal advises that he marry her, since a marriage would only gain against her husband. A fake marriage is provided for, and Janet returns to her uncle to announce her marriage. She does not know that it was Kirk who married her. Just then Kirk walks in to denounce Herrick, and Janet announces him as her husband. There is a clash of wills in which Kirk is victor, and the plotters abandon the attack upon the road, while Janet and Kirk plan to ratify their marriage.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, No. 2 (Pathé), Aug. 19.—Another number, full of five war pictures, some sketches of the new types of airplanes, then shows fighting in the Monte Grappa region of Italy, and scenes from the next trip in France, and scenes on the British channel. Clemenceau, War Minister of France, and K. A. George, of Britain, appear in certain scenes.

THE GIRL FROM BOHEMIA (Pathé Play), Aug. 19.—Comedy, written by Lois Zellner and directed by L. B. McGill. Irene Castle appears as a girl from Greenwich Village, who goes to a resort town, where she shocks the residents with her ideas. But the girl here is an attractive girl. The story is altogether pleasing in theme and development, and comes to a rousing patriotic finish.

EYES OF JULIA DEEP (American).—Mary Miles Minter, sweetly natural, radiant in the pricey flush, shows her her young beauty, in an exceedingly entertaining photoplay. The five reels are divided into speed draughts and swift comedies, almost exclusively devoted to her making. The audience will have their first pictures subjecting entertainment gratifyingly in this clever offering.

The story, which is located in Naples and Paris, is dramatic and generally appealing. It has been given excellent presentation. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

William L. Sherry Service.

THE INN OF THE BLUE MOON (De Luxe), Aug. 18.—This is a six-reel feature, written by Louis Joseph Vance. This is an extraordinary story of a man who becomes a living window. It is reviewed at length elsewhere.

Universal Film Company.

WHEN PARIS GREEN SAW RED (Nestor), Aug. 26.—A three-reel subject by Gertruie F. Ford. Neil Hart, Joe Rickson, Janet Eastman and Win. Gillis are in the cast. The plot involves a young man who marries the daughter of a rich man. The crooked secretary gets a hold on the father, but the hero with the help of action in this, some of the scenes occurring in the East and some on a ranch. The humor is rather forced, but well handled. Not an unusual subject, but enjoyable throughout.

BLOODSMOKING BLOOD (Star), Sept. 2.—A comedy number, by Harry Wisler, featuring Pat Rooney, Marsha Moore and others. Rivalry over a Briton village belle is the main motive. The horse race is the best feature, but as a vehicle merits no more than a passing appeal.

MARRIAGE WIND WEDDING (L-Ko), Sept. 4.—This comedy while it may get some laughs has just missed its mark as a burlesque of a courtship and wedding after the fashion of a burlesque on the filming of a moving picture, and as such is not particularly amusing.

THE EXTRA BRIDEGROOM (Star), Sept. 7.—This is one of the best of the successful light offerings being made by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. In this case Leo plays the rejected suitor at a wedding. After the ceremony he has been drowing his sorrows too literally and in a manner of speaking in a little home, where some laughable situations arise.

World Film Corporation.

INSIDE THE LINES (World-Picture), Aug. 18.—The story of an American soldier on the verge of being discharged from the army, which is directed by Alexander Korda, is the story of a girl who has been rejected by her fiancé because of a boarding school she was living in. Lewis S. Stone has the interesting role of the spy, who was number one, and Margaret Rawlings the heroine. The story is certain to be pleasurable. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

OLD-SMOKED NURSE (Marie Dressler-World Picture).—A two-reel comedy, featuring Marie Dressler as a nurse in a sanatorium. The story is told by a number of men who proceed to become patients in order to be near her. The humor is rather forced, but it is not as bad as there are some laughable moments. Marie's heroic treatment of the patients is the best feature.
A large telephone company says: “The voice with the smile wins.”

How true that is!
Let us apply that to YOUR business: “The screen with the smile wins.”

Equally true, isn't it?
War prices have made discriminating buyers, and people won't continue to bring you their money if you make your screen scowl by pictures that quiver or jump or in other ways offend the eye.

But in the best, the most successful Houses, you'll find the Simplex Twins on the job——making the screen smile, a smile that is reflected in the faces and hearts of the audience, a smile of satisfaction that makes the House win.
Therefore we say:

"LET THE Simplex TWINS MAKE YOUR SCREEN SMILE"

The Simplex Twins turn a scowling screen into a smiling one—to your profit

Keep Your Liberty Bonds

HOLD to that bond. You invested to help send the boys across. They are over now, at grips with the German monster. You expect them to hold on—hold on till the last vestige of autocracy is crushed out of him. Then you, too, must hold on—must keep your enlisted dollars invested on the fighting line.

It isn't the hooray of a campaign that wins a war. It's the will to hang on, to make sacrifice today, that tomorrow may bring victory.

And your investment. Those bonds are the safest investment you ever made. Don't be lured into exchanging them for the "securities" of some suave get-rich-quick operator. Big returns may be promised, but the bigger the promised returns the bigger the risk.

If you have to have money, take your bond to any bank and use it as collateral for a loan. There is no security the banker would rather have—nothing on which he will lend more willingly.

Don't use bonds to buy merchandise. The average merchant, accepting your bonds in trade, sells them immediately, thus tending to lower their market price and taking away from the buyer of your bonds the ability to lend a corresponding amount of money to his Government. Liberty Bonds are meant to help your country at War; are meant for investment and to provide an incentive for saving and a provision for the rainy day.

Hold fast to your Liberty Bonds. Hold fast for the sake of the boys "Over There". Hold fast because it is good business.

The Right Men in the Right Jobs Will Win the War

The true American wants to work where he will help win the war. He wants to fit in. America needs the Right Men in the Right Jobs. Only when this comes about can maximum production be obtained to support our armies at the front.

The needs of all war industries can be anticipated and met by the Government if employers and laborers will avail themselves solely of the nation-wide machinery which is at hand. The length of the War depends directly on our Country's ability to supply all War Industry with the best workers the country can produce the moment they are needed.

The U.S. Employment Service is the official bureau of the Federal Government in charge of the distribution of labor. The President has declared that it is the official agency for recruiting and distributing unskilled labor for war work.

It has over 500 branches throughout the nation, and 20,000 U.S. Public Service Reserve enrollment agents. Ask the local post office or newspaper for name and address of the nearest representative, or write to the U.S. Employment Service, Washington, D.C.

Those employers in war work who seek to get labor through their own or private recruiting agencies are interfering with the Government's machinery and preventing their interests to those of the nation. Only through strict compliance with the Government's program can the constant, restless shifting of labor from one war job to another, with the consequent diminution in production and efficiency, be prevented.

Above all, the Government urges every man engaged in war work to stick to his job until the Government recommends that he change. Any man not engaged in war work should put himself at the disposal of the nation by registering with the Public Service Reserve. This is a tremendously important duty! The war worker ranks with the fighter in the trenches. He will help beat the Hun.

"We Must Have New Plots"

By Frederick Palmer

President Palmer Photoplay Corporation, Los Angeles

Producers, directors and scenario editors face an actual shortage of good scenarios. Throughout the motion picture world is heard the cry for good material. Able writers, working at top speed, cannot keep up with present requirements. New scenarios must come from somewhere. And they must come now, and continuously. For the public's demand for entertainment must be supplied without intermission.

Training that will enable them to write acceptable scenarios. And training facilities are now available for the first time. Under my direction, the Palmer Photoplay Corporation is accepting enrollments of ambitious men and women who earnestly desire to learn how to put their scenario ideas into proper form for the screen.

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation hopes and expects to be successfully helpful to writers and producers. Advisory counsel and frank criticism are given under the Palmer Plan, which should not be confused with so-called schools or correspondence courses in scenario writing.

Frederick Palmer

(Creator of the Palmer Plan)

Endless Material is at Hand

It is time for producers to draw upon America's hundred million brains. There lie the stories and ideas—in these hundred million human minds. Thousands of Americans have tried to write scenarios—but rejection slips have dampened their ardor. Rejection slips, unfortunately, have been sent to writers of many a worthy plot because the plots were not constructed according to studio practice. Many a worthy plot has gone back wholly unread, for directors and editors haven't time to wade through reams of manuscript "literature" not suitably written for the screen. And directors and editors cannot be expected to give up previous time telling even the most promising writers how to construct their plots. So here we are—the country's fifth industry feeling a disastrous shortage of material—and with thousands craving the opportunity to supply it.

Good Ideas Plus Good Training

The time has come to draft the ideas of the masses. But, first, training must be given to the budding writers—

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship
Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.

We want an "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Near You! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Projectionist Ray says

"Speaking of exclusive features, Power's Loop Setter is always on the job and never fails to come across.

"Every projectionist knows what happens when he runs patched or badly worn film. Does he lose the lower loop? He sure does.

"He can't help it; but the Loop Setter can help HIM.

"When the loop is lost, this little device instantly resets it just as often as necessary—and it works automatically.

"The Loop Setter comes only with a Power's, which is another reason why the Cameragraph goes 'em all one better; and why, as I say of it,
